THE CITY OF NEW YORK
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
NEW YORK, NY 10007

January 6, 2016

Dear Friends:

I am pleased to welcome everyone to the Association of American Law Schools' 110th Annual Meeting, From Challenge to Innovation: Legal Education in 2016.

Founded in 1900, AALS comprises 179 law schools, and its distinguished members include lawyers, judges, lawmakers, faculty members, deans, librarians and administrators. Guided by its original aims to promote excellence in teaching and scholarship, academic freedom and diversity and to improve the legal profession, foster justice and cultivate community, AALS has hosted its popular conference for well over a century. The event offers thousands of attendees from across a range of backgrounds opportunities to network, access helpful resources and discuss the legal issues of today. As a bustling epicenter with an unparalleled legal system and a storied legal legacy, New York provides the perfect setting, and we extend a warm welcome to all of our visitors.

On behalf of the City of New York, please accept my best wishes for a terrific convention and continued success.

Sincerely,

A handwritten signature in cursive script that reads "Bill de Blasio".

Bill de Blasio
Mayor

Welcome to the 110th Annual Meeting of the Association of American Law Schools

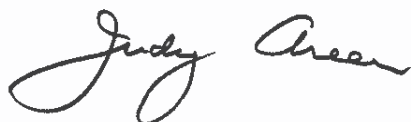

It is our great pleasure to welcome you to the 2016 Annual Meeting of the Association of American Law Schools. We have organized a full schedule of programs, events, and cultural opportunities to make this year's meeting both informative and inspirational.

This year's theme, selected by AALS President Blake D. Morant, Dean, The George Washington University School of Law, is "From Challenge to Innovation: Legal Education in 2016." He noted this year's meeting will provide "an unparalleled opportunity for legal educators and administrators to connect with colleagues from law schools around the nation, as well as the world, on matters of common interest at this crucial moment for legal education as well as the legal profession."

We think you will find many programs worth attending at the 2016 Annual Meeting. On Wednesday, January 6, at 5:30 p.m., the meeting will begin with our first-ever primer for first-time attendees that will provide a roadmap for how to make the most out of the Annual Meeting. On Thursday, January 7, we will begin the day with an opening plenary program (replacing the former AALS luncheon) that will allow attendees to hear the plenary speakers without having to incur the expense of a hotel lunch. At noon on Thursday, we are honored to present a moderated discussion with Justice Stephen Breyer. On Thursday at 5 pm, we will hold an opening reception in the Hilton, where you can enjoy drinks and light appetizers while mixing and mingling with other leaders of the legal academy and the profession. At this year's meeting, we will be adding innovative programs never before held at the Annual Meeting, including "Arc of Career" programs specifically designed for professors at various stages of their careers. Small discussion groups will provide faculty with the opportunity to engage in an in-depth exploration of many varied topics of interest.

We hope that you have a pleasant stay at the two co-headquarter hotels, the New York Hilton Midtown and the Sheraton New York and that you enjoy all of their amenities including complimentary Wi-Fi in guest rooms, free access to their health clubs, and a 20 percent discount on food (including room service at the Sheraton). We hope you make the most of the professional development and networking opportunities offered during the three and a half day meeting.

With all best wishes,

From Challenge to Innovation: American Legal Education in 2016

The present state of American legal education raises pivotal questions: What is the relevance of legal education in a complex and global market? Has its value diminished in light of the significant investment required to pursue a law degree? Perhaps more seminal, is American legal education able to equip students with the tools needed to succeed in a global marketplace?

Despite questions of value, the need for quality legal education has never been more acute. The global market needs professionals who can think critically and provide innovative solutions to complex problems. American legal education has long addressed this need.

The current challenging times for legal education have prompted us to think more creatively about pedagogy and curriculum. The academy's continued evolution has led to more dynamic programs that produce adroit professionals who can better function in a complex, more diverse market. Many of the new programs that have emerged during these challenging times explore the intersection of classroom doctrine and real-world problems. Other innovations seek to add value and manage costs. The array of new programs underway continues to expand. At the same time, law schools continue their vital roles both innovators and as critics of law through the scholarship that their faculty members produce.

Challenge has truly prompted innovation. Law schools and faculties should work to foster the dynamism that comes from the academy's continual evolution. Although the challenges confronting law schools are significant, the resolve to meet them has never been stronger.

Badges for Children

Come to the AALS Registration Desk and ask for badges for your children. These colorful badges will provide your children access to program sessions. There are additional fees for children to attend meal events.

Child Care

AALS does not provide childcare services onsite at the conference. Consult with the hotel concierge for more information.

Consent to use of photographic, video, and audio materials

The AALS will have a photographer and videographer at special events, sessions, exhibits and throughout the hotel common areas used for the Annual Meeting. Photos and videos taken during the Annual Meeting will remain the property of the AALS and may be distributed or used in future marketing materials. Your attendance at the Annual Meeting indicates your acceptance to be photographed, filmed, or recorded, and to the AALS's use of your image, without payment of any kind, in program(s) and for other purposes designated by the AALS in the future.

Continuing Legal Education Credit

The 2016 AALS conference offers attendees over 200 sessions on a wide variety of topics on the legal profession and legal education. In order to streamline the confirmation of attendance to the sessions, we ask each attendee to record his/her participation by signing the CLE sheet located at the back of each session room.

If you are unsure of whether or not you signed a session CLE sheet, please visit the AALS Information Desk located on the third floor of the New York Hilton Midtown. Staff can manually add your name, provided you bring a witness to your attendance at the session in question. Attendance cannot be changed on any CLE sheet after the conclusion of the Annual Meeting.

You may request letters of attendance by writing to cleattendance@aals.org.

Electronic Devices

We ask you to please silence your electronic devices during the meeting sessions.

You will also be able to create your own schedule of sessions you are interested in attending, provide feedback after each session by filling out the surveys and email notes. The mobile app contains the most current information, including all of the late changes not included in the printed program.

To download, visit the Apple App Store or Google Play Store and search for AALS2016, install and run. Once the app is downloaded, no internet connection is required.

AALS would like to thank and recognize West Academic for sponsoring the mobile app.

Podcasts

AALS will record when possible, AALS special events and section programs. These audio recordings will be made available at no charge to faculty and professional staff from AALS member and fee-paid schools on the Annual Meeting website late in January. The recordings may be distributed to the media, including comments from both the speakers and the audience. Speakers who have signed a refusal to record will still be recorded but will be edited out prior to posting or distribution. For questions related to podcasting please visit the AALS Information Desk located in the foyer on the third floor of the New York Hilton Midtown.

Private Room for Mothers

AALS will provide a room with electrical power, a refrigerator and a locking door for nursing mothers who are attending the Annual Meeting. Please visit the AALS Information Desk located on the Third Floor Foyer of the New York Hilton Midtown for access to the room.

Section Meal Events

Tickets for meal events are limited. Tickets for section breakfasts and luncheons are available for purchase up until the close of Registration on the evening prior to the meal event. AALS now follows PCI Data Security Compliance Standards, which are designed to ensure that all companies that process, store or transmit credit card information maintain a secure environment. We can accept your payment in advance, but in order to meet standards, we will not be selling tickets at the door of ticketed events.

Additionally, paper tickets will no longer be handed out at registration to be used as entry into meal events. In their place, AALS Staff will use barcode scanners to scan your conference badge. However, attendees with a meal selection of “Vegan/Vegetarian” will still be provided a paper ticket to present to their server during seated meals.

Section Business Meetings

Starting this year, Sections had the choice to hold a business meeting in-person at the Annual Meeting or a virtual meeting in advance of the meeting. Please refer to your Section’s program listing in the schedule to find out when the business meeting will be held, or if it was already held in advance.

Social Media

Follow AALS on Twitter, Facebook, and LinkedIn. Please tweet about the conference using the hashtag #AALS2016. You can also post directly from the mobile app.

Highlights and New Programming

This year's meeting, the 110th Annual Meeting of the Association, is packed with programs for law school deans, faculty, and administrators. We think you will find many programs worth attending. Our schedule includes new programming options such as the First Time Meeting Attendees Session, Arc of Career Programs, Academy Programs, and Discussion Groups. In addition, we have scheduled an Opening Plenary Session and an Opening Reception on the first full day of the meeting. We have highlighted some of these new program options for you below.

On Wednesday, January 6, at 5:30 pm, the meeting will begin with our first-ever primer for first-time attendees: What is AALS, and Why Does It Matter for My Career? and How Do I Get the Most out of the Annual Meeting? This session will provide a roadmap on how to make the most out of the Annual Meeting.

On Thursday, January 7, we will begin the day with an Opening Plenary Program that replaces the former AALS Luncheon. The opening plenary includes two of the three authors of the joint essay Lawyers as Professionals and as Citizens: Key Roles and Responsibilities in the 21st Century with speakers Benjamin W. Heineman, Jr., Former Senior Vice President for Law and Public Affairs, General Electric and David B. Wilkins, Harvard Law School. Their essay presents a practical vision of the responsibilities of today's lawyers as both professionals and as citizens.

On January 7 at noon, the Honorable Stephen Breyer, U.S. Supreme Court will join Alan Morrison, The George Washington University Law School, for a stimulating conversation about legal education and the law. They will also discuss Justice Breyer's book, "The Court and the World: American Law and the New Global Realities," which explores the work of the Supreme Court in an increasingly interconnected world. It considers how best to harmonize American law and interests with the laws of other jurisdictions and the expansion of the rule of law generally. Justice Breyer will explore the growing importance of American jurists taking on the role of "constitutional diplomats" in a fast-changing, global world. There will be a book signing immediately following Justice Breyer's program.

On Thursday, January 7, at 5 pm, conclude your day at the AALS Opening Reception, where you can enjoy drinks and light appetizers while mixing and mingling with your colleagues from law schools across the nation. The reception will be held in the Grand Ballroom of the New York Hilton, which is also the AALS Exhibit Hall. We invite attendees to visit the exhibiting companies during the reception to learn about new products and services available to the law school community.

Arc of Career Programs have been specifically designed for faculty at various stages of their law school careers—pre-tenure to early tenured, reinvention at mid-career, retirement and other transitions, and are scheduled throughout the meeting. There is something for everyone, come listen and learn about the following:

- Using Rounds About Teaching to Provide Peer Support and Learning Over the Course of a Career: Continuing Education for Teachers Who Educate Lawyers
Thursday, January 7, 10:15 a.m. – 12 p.m.
- Scholarly Engagement Post-Tenure
Thursday, January 7, 1:30 p.m. – 3:15 p.m.
- Impossible Realities, Infinite Loops and Movable Staircases: The Impact of Institutional Marginalization on the Tricky, Unpredictable, and Inconsistent Trajectory of the Non-Tenured Track Career
Friday, January 8, 8:30 a.m. – 10:15 a.m.
- So You Want to Publish a Book?
Friday, January 8, 1:30 p.m. – 3:15 p.m.
- The AALS In Spite of Itself: How to Use the AALS for Professional Development Even If It Sometimes Makes You Mad
Saturday, January 9, 8:30 a.m. – 10:15 a.m.
- Joining the Administration: Law School and University Leadership for Law School Professors
Sunday, January 10, 8:30 a.m. – 10:15 a.m.

Discussion Groups are another new program format that has been introduced this year to facilitate scholarly discussion and engagement. They will provide a small group of faculty an opportunity to engage in a sustained conversation about a topic of interest. The Discussion Group sessions do not feature formal presentations. The objective is to facilitate a lively and engaging real-time discussion among participants. Discussion Group topics include:

- Ethics and Practice of Community Engagement, thursday
January 7, 3:30 p.m. – 4:45 p.m.
- Introducing Professional Identity Development into the Law School Curriculum
Thursday, January 7, 3:30 p.m. – 4:45 p.m.
- Increasing Author Diversity in Legal Scholarship: Individual and Institutional Strategies
Saturday, January 9, 3:30 p.m. – 4:45 p.m.
- Fostering Entrepreneurial Lawyering in Curricular Design,
Saturday, January 9, 3:30 p.m. – 4:45 p.m.

Hot topic programs at the 2016 AALS Annual Meeting highlight important and timely topics on some of society's most pressing legal issues. These programs were selected by the Program Committee for the AALS 2016 Annual Meeting from proposals submitted by law school faculty.

- What Will and Should Happen to Affirmative Action after Fisher v. Texas
Thursday, January 7, 1:30 p.m. – 3:15 p.m.
- Let's Talk About Trigger Warnings: Best Practices in Teaching Tough Topics
Friday, January 8, 8:30 a.m. – 10:15 a.m.
- Grappling with Campus Rape
Friday, January 8, 10:30 a.m. – 12:15 p.m.
- Beyond Cellphone Evidence: Video Advocacy in Criminal Proceedings
Saturday, January 9, 8:30 a.m. – 10:15 a.m.
- Immigration & The 2016 Presidential Election: Campaign Rhetoric, Minority Voting,
and Policy Possibilities
Saturday, January 9, 10:30 a.m. – 12:15 p.m.
- Responding to the Money Bail Crisis
Saturday, January 9, 1:30 p.m. – 3:15 p.m.

Explanation of Program Types

Most programs at the Annual Meeting are planned by one of the one hundred sections. Programs marked Call for Papers include at least one presenter selected on the basis of a call for papers. Programs marked as a Law Review Published Program will have their papers published in a law review. The Program Committee for the 2016 Annual Meeting selected Academy, Crosscutting, Discussion Groups, Hot Topics, and Symposia programs from proposals submitted by law school faculty; the AALS Task Force on Professional Development selected Arc of Your Career Programs.

Program types at the Annual Meeting include:

[New] Academy Programs – Programs submitted by faculty that do not fit into any of the other program categories.

[New] Arc of Career programs – Specifically designed to help law faculty with professional development over the course of their law school careers from pre-tenure, to reinvention at mid-career, to retirement.

Crosscutting Programs – Focus on multi-subject and interdisciplinary subjects and seek to offer new perspectives on legal issues.

[New] Discussion Groups – Program sessions that provide a setting for an in-depth discussion of topics by a smaller group of participants.

Hot Topic Programs – Late-breaking issues of general interest.

Symposium – A day-long opportunity to examine a specific issue topic in greater depth than is possible during a regular panel program.

Pedagogy Programs – Section programs on pedagogy designed for new law school teachers.

Works-in-Progress Programs – Section programs in which senior law scholars assist junior scholars ready their scholarship for submission to law reviews.

AALS LAW AND FILM SERIES

Beekman Parlor, Second Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

The Feature Film Selection: Reversal of Fortune

Moderator: Christine Alice Corcos, Louisiana State University, Paul M. Hebert Law Center

The Law and Film Series presents films chosen for their cinematic and legal value, identifying film resources for possible classroom instructional purposes, as well as for raising general awareness of the connection between law and film. For each of the two nights of film showings, we will present films chosen by the AALS Annual Meeting Film Advisory Committee. There will be brief discussions and commentary in connection with the films.

Reversal of Fortune is a 1990 film adapted from the 1985 book Reversal of Fortune: Inside the von Bülow Case, written by law professor Alan Dershowitz. The film recounts the true story of Claus von Bülow, charged with the attempted murder of his wife, socialite Sunny von Bülow who is in a coma after falling into diabetic shock. He turns to Professor Dershowitz for help with his case. Although initially hesitant to take the case and struggling with questions of von Bülow's guilt or innocence, Professor Dershowitz ultimately does so, seeking legal exoneration for his client with the help of his law students. The film stars Jeremy Irons, Glenn Close, and Ron Silver. Join moderator Professor Christine Corcos for a discussion after the film.

Welcome: Blake D. Morant, The George Washington University Law School

Speakers:

Benjamin W. Heineman, Esq., Former Senior Vice President for Law and Public Affairs, General Electric, New Canaan, CT

David B. Wilkins, Harvard Law School

In this time of dramatic change for both the legal profession and society, the need for an ethical vision of lawyering is all the more challenging and urgent. Law schools have a crucial role to play, not only in preparing students to become effective expert technicians, wise counselors, and effective leaders, but also in generating knowledge about law and legal institutions and the relationship between these institutions and societal welfare. The authors’ article encourages deans and faculty to recognize the important role that law schools play as part of the legal profession and to reexamine their own obligations to the legal framework and society, to the law school as an institution, and to students.

The opening plenary includes two of the three authors of the joint essay “Lawyers as Professionals and as Citizens: Key Roles and Responsibilities in the 21st Century.” Their essay presents a practical vision of the responsibilities of lawyers as both professionals and as citizens at the beginning of the 21st century. The complete essay can be found at https://clp.law.harvard.edu/assets/Professionalism-Project-Essay_11.20.14.pdf.

Donna H. Lee, City University of New York School of Law

Wallace J. Mlyniec, Georgetown University Law Center

Ann C. Shalleck, American University, Washington College of Law

Structured peer support and on-going professional education are helpful to the project of attracting, training, and sustaining faculty members engaged in the demanding project of teaching students to be responsible members of the legal profession. We will discuss and demonstrate how a model of professional development that we originally used for clinical teachers—Rounds About Teaching—can benefit the entire faculty. Rounds about Teaching is a training model that builds a community of teachers who participate in regular facilitated peer conversations built upon the experience of teaching. In rounds conversations teachers can tell stories about events in their classrooms, get ideas about what and how to teach, reflect with supportive colleagues about the relationship between what they did and what they wanted to teach, and plan for the future with the benefit of the insights of others. We have found that building a community of teachers around the project of teaching makes each of us more conscious and deliberate in connecting the decisions we make in all phases of our teaching to both our own pedagogical goals and overall curricular design.

Christopher J. Walker, The Ohio State University, Michael

E. Moritz College of Law

President Obama's recent executive actions establishing a process for certain immigrant populations to apply for deferred action, and the legal challenges to those actions, has renewed interest in the intersection of immigration law and administrative law. This panel seeks both to situate immigration law within the larger administrative law landscape and, at the same time, to determine the extent to which meaningful immigration law reform might exist without legislation. To the first purpose, we ask whether immigration law has an exceptional position within administrative law. With its continued reliance on guidance documents and its unique structure for administrative adjudications, does immigration law operate differently from other fields? What, if anything, does immigration law teach us about administrative law? With its regulation of human admissions and deportations, should immigration law be different? To the second purpose, we assess the possibilities for meaningful immigration law reform without Congress. Will future immigration reform be limited to executive actions (or the revocation of those actions)? If so, how will this affect the public's understanding of immigration law's legitimacy and the role that courts will play?

Robin Lerner, Deputy Assistant Secretary, U.S. Department of State Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs, Washington, D.C.

Jeffrey Ellis Thomas, University of Missouri-Kansas City
School of Law
Fernando Villarreal-Gonda, Academic Dean, Facultad
Libre de Derecho de Monterrey, Santa Catarina,
Nuevo Leon, Mexico

This panel will explore the mechanics of developing formal partnership agreements between U.S. and overseas law schools, and highlight other opportunities for law professors, law students, and other members of the legal profession to collaborate through exchanges and other mechanisms. The panel will examine the mechanics of creating trans-boundary partnerships, and the needed documentation, financial resources, and personnel. It will consider burdens and benefits associated with partnerships, financial and otherwise, and suggest how partnerships might be structured to benefit the full range of stakeholders. The panel will address U.S. and non-U.S. government resources available to support partnerships and other exchange arrangements, and how to access those resources.

Katherine M. Franke, Columbia University School of Law
R. R. Reno, Editor and Executive Director, First Things,
New York, NY

Kevin Walsh, The University of Richmond School of Law
Robin Fretwell Wilson, University of Illinois
College of Law

Over the past 15 years, the United States has seen a rapid change in attitudes toward same-sex marriage. That change has raised significant questions and challenges for various religious communities in the United States. Religious communities have responded in different ways—from endorsement to ambivalence to rejection. This year's panel will explore these various reactions, including theological changes within religious communities, legal challenges advanced by religious communities, and legislative initiatives pursued by religious communities, as well as a host of other social, political, and legal responses to same-sex marriage in the United States. It will discuss how religious communities might, or might not, adapt to continuing social changes in the United States and how the United States will maintain its constitutional and cultural commitment to the religious freedom of these different communities.

SECTION ON LAW AND SPORTS

East Suite, Fourth Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

The New Frontier in College Sports: The Professionalization of Amateurism

Moderator: Matthew J. Parlow, Marquette University
Law School

Speakers:

William W. Berry, III, University of Mississippi
School of Law
Roger M. Groves, Florida Coastal School of Law
Oliver Luck, Executive Vice President of Regulatory Affairs, National Collegiate Athletic Association,
Washington, D.C.
Mary M. Penrose, Texas A&M University School of Law

Amateurism in college sports has become a hot topic with the proliferation of lawsuits by college athletes essentially seeking “pay for play.” For example, in the O’Bannon and related cases, college players are suing the NCAA and its business partners, seeking compensation for the use of player names and likenesses in ancillary consumer products like video games. Given that amateurism at its core requires not being paid for participation, college sports is most certainly at a crossroads. Many are debating the appropriateness of compensating athletes and the amounts they should receive. Others are considering the potential implications of athlete pay on Title IX. But the professionalization (or commercialization) of amateurism extends far beyond athlete remuneration. Athletes’ intellectual property rights play an increasingly significant role in collegiate athletics. Colleges and universities also place many workplace restrictions on athletes, including bans or limitations on social media usage. In light of these issues, this panel will explore the evolving concept of amateurism, particularly with the continued professionalization of college sports. The panel will also consider lessons from the United States Olympic Committee in its efforts to manage its definition of amateurism, and forecast future challenges in this evolving area of law and business.

Best Practices for Supervising Seminar Papers and Other Scholarly Writings

Moderator: Kathryn M. Stanchi, Temple University, James E. Beasley School of Law

Speakers:

Andrea Armstrong, Loyola University New Orleans College of Law

Darby Dickerson, Texas Tech University School of Law
Elizabeth Fajans, Brooklyn Law School

Nancy J. Soonpaa, Texas Tech University School of Law

To enhance students' ability to successfully complete their upper-level scholarly writing requirement, they may need additional instruction in scholarly writing. This session provides practical teaching tips for professors of seminar courses and faculty advisors of student journals. One panelist will share her experience teaching a scholarly writing seminar for law review students. She seeks to create a collaborative student-run environment for critical academic writing. Another panelist will discuss how teachers can intervene in the prewriting stages of topic and thesis development to ensure the final paper is more than just a research paper. She will also briefly discuss writing constructive comments. Throughout the process of formulating and writing a paper, students may benefit from on-demand learning, such as through videotaped lectures. Two panelists will address their experience creating videotaped lectures on topic/thesis selection and research, developing an outline, and proper attribution via citation and footnoting. This type of resource can add an instructional and writing-specific component to a seminar course more economically and efficiently than a live-instruction model. The ABA standards and faculty-supervision requirement are important related topics.

SECTION ON STUDENT SERVICES

New York West, Third Floor, Sheraton New York Times Square Hotel

It Takes a Village: Collaborative Ways to Promote Student Professionalism, Resiliency, and Leadership

With the evolution of American legal education, it takes a village of faculty and administrators to provide services and programming to address students' changing needs. Students evolving experiences can include substance abuse, mental health challenges, and intentional or unintentional identity-based interactions. How do we provide assistance, guidance, and programming that encourage a positive professional identity? Our series of panel discussions will address the need for collaborative ways faculty and administrators can understand our students' experiences, create resiliency, and highlight professionalism in law school and the legal profession.

Morrison, The George Washington University Law SchoolSpeaker: Stephen G. Breyer, Associate Justice, Supreme Court of the United States, Washington, D.C.

Justice Breyer will join Alan Morrison, The George Washington University Law School, for a stimulating conversation about legal education and the law. They will also discuss Justice Breyer's book, The Court and the World: American Law and the New Global Realities, which explores the work of the Supreme Court in an increasingly interconnected world. It considers how best to harmonize American law and interests with the laws of other jurisdictions and the expansion of the rule of law generally. Justice Breyer will explore the growing importance of American jurists taking on the role of "constitutional diplomats" in a fast-changing, global world.

The dialogue format will make for lively discussion on legal education and the role of the law in a world increasingly defined by instant communication and shared problems.

There will be a book signing immediately following the program.

Every seven years a site visit team made up of law professors, university administrators, and practitioners/judges visits member law schools as part of the ABA accreditation/AALS membership review process. The AALS appoints one member (the AALS reporter) to the ABA/AALS sabbatical site team. The reporter is a member of the joint team and also writes an additional report for the AALS focusing on the organization's core values. This workshop is designed for those who serve, or are interested in serving, as the AALS reporter. It also provides essential information about the ABA approval sabbatical process, as the AALS reporter also functions as a full member of the site team and will have responsibility for a portion of the ABA report.

AALS HOT TOPIC PROGRAM*Beekman Parlor, Second Floor, New York Hilton MidtownWhat Will and Should Happen to Affirmative Action after *Fisher v TexasModerator and Speaker: Erwin Chemerinsky, University of California, Irvine School of LawSpeakers:Devon Wayne Carbado, University of California, Los Angeles School of Law

Brian Fitzpatrick, Vanderbilt University Law School

Nancy Leong, University of Denver Sturm College of Law

Eric J. Segall, Georgia State University College of Law

Ilya Somin, George Mason University School of Law

The Supreme Court is going to revisit affirmative action this term in Fisher v. Texas. The argument will likely center around whether Texas explored race neutral alternatives seriously enough to satisfy the Court's strict scrutiny standard of review. This panel will discuss that question as well as 1) whether the Court should revisit its standard of review; 2) whether there are arguments that might convince either Justice Kennedy or Justice Roberts to move more to the center on this issue; and 3) and whether the very phrase "affirmative action" is misleading and inaccurate given what universities really want is a vibrant, diverse student body to better prepare all students for the multicultural world they will live and work in after graduation. The panel will also address the textual and originalist arguments implicated by the voluntary use of racial criteria by public universities to help build a diverse student body.

Juniors are mentored. Seniors have found their niche. But what about midlevels? Saturated by a tenure push of articles, having aged out of pre-tenure colloquia, and being asked suddenly to take on new administrative and institutional responsibilities (Research Dean? ALI? Appointments Chair? Tenure letters?), midlevels are susceptible to the post-tenure slump. At the same time, midlevels are bombarded by opportunities to explore new avenues for scholarship: to "get interdisciplinary," to write books and book reviews, to experiment with popular media outlets, to co-author projects, to participate in litigation, to participate in legislative or rulemaking processes, and to transition from mentee to mentor. This panel, composed of true mid-career scholars, will focus on navigating the hurdles and maximizing the opportunities for midlevel scholarship. Although set up in a traditional moderator/panel format, individual presentations will be limited, and the moderator will foster greater intrapanel discussion and audience Q&A than customary.

This panel will explore the remarkable progress, and acute difficulties, in the struggle for LGBT rights in Africa. Much of its attention will go to South Africa, a country in which LGBT rights have received emphatic constitutional protection – but in which public attitudes, and often the realities of daily life, lag well behind constitutional guarantees. Activists in South Africa have made effective use of courts as a tool in their struggle, but doing so has entailed careful planning of incremental litigation and (on the judges' side) careful decisions about when to rely on legislative actors to implement the constitution's commands. Meanwhile, activists elsewhere in Africa face public attitudes at least as resistant as those in South Africa, but the challenges within any one country are magnified by the extent to which Africa is both the colonial inheritor and the present target of moral agendas pressed by those in the West. The presenters and commentators will explore these complex and troubling issues on this panel.

Business meeting at program conclusion.

This program will explore the role of contract in unincorporated associations, with particular emphasis on the LLC and limited partnership forms. In most jurisdictions, the sparse prescriptions in the default rules imply that the parties will draft an operating agreement that reflects the material points of their bargain. For example, Delaware emphasizes that its policy for LLCs and LPs is to give “maximum effect to the principle of freedom of contract.” Modern contract theory, however, raises significant questions about the extent to which any documentation of a transaction can be “complete,” even if sophisticated parties negotiate at arm's length and attempt to fully reduce their expectations to writing. If complete contracts are indeed an ideal rather than the reality, can legislatures impose default rules (fiduciary or otherwise) to fill the gaps without undermining the benefits of private ordering? To what extent should judges look outside the operating agreement to determine the parties' intent? Our format will be a lively moderated discussion, and we will invite significantly more audience participation from the outset than attendees may have come to expect from AALS section meetings.

Challenging Assumptions About Caregiving

Moderator: Roberta K. Flowers, Stetson University
College of Law

Speakers:

Alexander A. Boni-Saenz, Assistant Professor, Chicago-Kent College of Law, Illinois Institute of Technology
Kristin B. Glen, City University of New York School of Law
Nancy J. Knauer, Temple University, James E. Beasley School of Law
Nina A. Kohn, Syracuse University College of Law

In this session, a diverse group of legal scholars will help reimagine how the law might support both older adults and care providers by challenging common assumptions about caregiving relationships. Specifically, participants will challenge assumptions about the identity of caregivers, the scope of caretaking responsibilities, compensation for care providers, and the impact of traditional approaches to caring for older adults. Topics of discussion will include: (1) the role and legal treatment of non-family care providers, especially in relation to care for LGBT elders, (2) the “taboo” needs of care recipients including needs related to sexual intimacy; (3) the “myth” that surrogate decision-making and guardianship protects older adults; and (4) the Medicaid program's hidden penalties for those who employ family members as care providers.

The pursuits of civil rights and related social justice movements are seldom one-dimensional. There is much that must go wrong before unrest in places like Ferguson, Baltimore, or Cleveland manifest in tragedy and action. Accordingly, this panel will be broad in scope. Proposed topics including recording police interactions with the public, the criminalization of black youth, and #blacklivesmatter are welcome. In addition, topics exploring the connection between community development and the civil rights movement are particularly encouraged. Such topics might include economic development, affordable housing, the impact of policing on community development, or funding disparities in public education. How do economic considerations factor into instances of social injustice? Are instances of police brutality expressions of the underlying disease of racism or merely its symptoms? What can communities and community leaders do to improve matters at both local and national levels? How is movement building around civil rights different fifty years after the passage of the Civil Rights Act and what are the intersections that can advance civil rights in the 21st Century?

Female scholars have made pivotal contributions to the development of commercial and consumer laws and scholarship in the United States, especially in the past few decades. Not only have specific women's voices played an important role, but distinctively feminist concerns have engendered changes in legal theory and policy. This panel will discuss the contributions that specific female legal academics have made to the field (as just a few examples, Elizabeth Warren and Jean Braucher). Also, it will reflect on how feminist concerns have influenced commercial and consumer law scholarship. Finally, it will also include scholarship focused on women's experiences with consumer and commercial law.

Is Jewish law explicitly, or implicitly, premised on some foundational understandings of the nature of what law is? Are there multiple such conceptions in early rabbinic materials? Have multiple understandings emerged over time and across space, perhaps influenced by non-Jewish jurisprudence? Do competing jurisprudential understandings have divergent implications for legal reasoning and other methods (such as looking to custom) in determining the law's content? Is there a connection between Jewish analytical jurisprudence (if there is such a thing) and formalism? Is self-conscious consideration of analytical jurisprudence's application to Jewish law useful, merely academic, potentially pernicious? Why?

Legal academics possess a formidable, if not wholly documented, tradition of community engagement. Some law professors come to community engagement from a background of teaching and practice. Others first found their bearings in careers like community organizing before they came to law teaching and scholarship. Whatever the journey, the active presence of law professors in communities carries tremendous power.

Although law professors are ensconced in the “ivory tower,” they also function as part of the larger community. Law professors are civilians, but their legal training and knowledge provides them with both perceived and real power. For centuries, law professors have engaged the community by exercising their power in a variety of ways. For instance, law professors have contributed to the community by running legal clinics since perhaps the early 1900’s. By the 1960’s, such contributions were widespread because law clinics rapidly emerged at law schools nationwide and were regularly taking up the issues of their communities. Today, law professors engage with communities for manifold purposes, such as fostering participatory democracy, engaging in community lawyering, making film documentaries, continuing the tradition of developing legal clinics, participating in local politics and philanthropy, organizing community conferences, and conducting empirical research.

This discussion group will address the ethics, practice, and challenges of law professors’ community engagement in light of their role as civilians and their power as lawyers. These dual roles and dynamics raise questions of class, power, and voice in community engagement. They also raise questions regarding the impact of race, gender, ability, sexuality, and other identity characteristics and experiences on individual law professors’ efforts to engage the communities they struggle for and serve. In essence, this discussion group asks: How does the law professor’s liminal status influence his or her community engagement, and how should it?

The specific questions that this discussion group will address include: What is “the community,” and how do law professors find it? What are the building blocks of an ethics of community engagement? What sources can law professors draw from in engaging their communities? What is the role of law professors engaging with community—participant or observer, conduit for community voice and facilitator, or organizer and activist—and how might they tackle the tensions between these roles? How do law schools recognize the community engagement of law professors? Is it considered part of their teaching, service, or scholarship? Do law professors enhance or jeopardize their careers by engaging with the community?

The participants of this Discussion Group consist of a mix of individuals identified in the original proposal and individuals selected from a call for participation. Attendees who are not formal participants, are welcome to attend the Discussion Group, although space is limited. The moderator may open the discussion to include attendees at some point during the session.

Law schools have excelled for generations at teaching developing lawyers the doctrinal foundations, analytical skills and practical skills they will need to provide effective counsel to clients. Despite their excellence in imparting these crucial skills, however, law schools have been remiss in helping students to develop the self-awareness, character and perspective necessary to be excellent counselors. Recognizing this failing, many law schools have taken steps to introduce programs in their curricula to help students develop their professional identity. This discussion group will include a diverse group of legal educators from around the U.S. and other professionals who have made strides at their respective institutions to introduce programs that assist students in developing their own personal sense of professional identity as lawyers.

The specific questions that this discussion group will address include:

What do we mean by “professional identity” and what are the qualities of an excellent professional identity?

What have law schools done to identify clear outcomes related to the development of professional identity?

What activities, readings, exercises and assessments are most effective in helping students to develop a professional identity?

How has professional identity development been introduced in doctrinal courses?

What more can and should law schools do to help students develop their professional identity?

Who should teach professional identity development in a law school?

How have law schools negotiated the mechanics of administering a course on professional identity development, including grading (pass/fail v. graded), required v. elective units, number of units, and adapting the course to a grading curve?

The participants for a Discussion Group will consist of a mix of individuals identified in the original proposal and individuals selected from a call for participation. Attendees who are not formal participants, are welcome to attend the Discussion Group, although space is limited. The moderator may open the discussion to include attendees at some point during the session.

Boyle Laisure, St. John's University School of LawSpeakers:Anne Mullins, University of North Dakota School of Law
Terrill Pollman, University of Nevada, Las Vegas, William S. Boyd School of Law
Carrie Sperling, University of Wisconsin Law School

This panel will describe pedagogy techniques informed by current knowledge of cognitive science and student performance. First, faculty and students' knowledge about the "growth mindset" can help new and experienced law teachers improve student learning. The panel will discuss how students can improve their performance by adopting a growth mindset. Second, student performance can also be improved when teachers use team-based learning techniques. Students working with team-based learning techniques come alive in the classroom! The panelists will outline teamwork skills to enhance in-class learning, using a sequence of steps to make collaborative learning effective. Team-based learning can follow a model of individual work, followed by teamwork, followed by feedback. Lastly, legal-writing professors create language as they model analysis and teach through worked examples of the writing process. The panelists will address building a useful vocabulary and pairing it with examples-based learning in first-year classes and beyond.

The unprecedented degradation of the planet’s vital ecosystems is one of the most pressing issues confronting the international community today. Despite the proliferation of legal instruments to combat environmental degradation, the global economy continues to exceed ecosystem limits, thereby putting present and future generations at risk and threatening the integrity of the planet’s biodiversity.

International environmental law has generally failed to halt or reverse the rapid deterioration of the planet’s life support systems. Conflicts between affluent and poor countries (the North-South divide) over environmental priorities, over the allocation of responsibility for environmental harm, and over the relationship between environmental protection and economic development have generated gridlock in environmental treaty negotiations as well as inadequate compliance with existing agreements. The fragmentation of international law has also created regulatory gaps in areas of acute concern to vulnerable communities in the global South (such as food, water, and energy) and inconsistencies between environmental and economic law and policy.

This panel examines the ways in which North-South conflicts have compromised the effectiveness of efforts to protect the global environment, and discusses strategies to bridge the North-South divide. Drawing upon the expertise of the panelists in areas as diverse as energy justice, food justice, human rights, climate change, and international economic law, this panel examines the limitations and promise of international environmental law through multi-disciplinary lenses. All of the speakers are experts in international environmental law and in one or more areas of international law that have a direct impact on the environment. Each presenter will discuss the North-South divide in international environmental law through his or her particular area of expertise. The program will thus be of interest to faculty who teach or write in the area of international economic law, international environmental law, human rights law, food law, energy law, climate change, sustainable development, environmental justice, and law and development.

Let’s Talk About Trigger Warnings: Best Practices in Teaching Tough Topics

Speakers:

Susan L. Brooks, Drexel University Thomas R. Kline School of Law

Kim D. Chanbonpin, The John Marshall Law School

Cheryl I. Harris, University of California, Los Angeles School of Law

Katherine M. Hessler, Lewis and Clark Law School

This hot topics session will broaden this year’s debate on whether trigger warnings, designed to protect students from disturbing content, are warranted in the law school classroom. For example, identifying best practices in teaching rape law in required criminal law courses is part of a broader discussion involving many other courses throughout the law school curriculum that strike a personally difficult chord with students. This panel will distinguish best practices in teaching sensitive topics in different pedagogical contexts—from a large mixed audience in a required first year course to upper division required and elective courses to smaller experiential client-based courses.

When law professors who are not on the tenure track are institutionally marginalized by non-existent or reduced contracts, lack of voting rights, and noncompetitive salaries, the Arc of Career becomes distorted. The non-tenured, tenuously contracted or non-contracted professor spins in a whirling dervish to achieve professional success in the face of a potentially meaningless result. We work diligently to improve and update our courses, participate in national legal education associations, run conferences, give talks, write papers, blog online, counsel students, provide both public service and service within our law schools, and obtain book contracts. Nonetheless, we are confined to a status restricting us and holding us back from having the freedom to fully advance in our professional careers. For such members of the academy, there is no arc, as we are prevented from reaching the peak or, alternatively, we reach the peak only to find it is a cliff rather than the anticipated slow, gentle descent.

SECTION ON ANTITRUST AND ECONOMIC REGULATION*Nassau West, Second Floor, New York Hilton MidtownAntitrust and the State*Moderator: Daniel A. Crane, The University of Michigan
Law SchoolSpeakers:Rebecca Haw Allensworth, Vanderbilt University
Law School

Marina L. Lao, Seton Hall University School of Law

William H. Page, University of Florida Fredric G. Levin

State action is a double-edged sword for competition policy. Sometimes, the state intervenes in markets to correct failures or protect consumers. Other times, however, economic special interests capture regulation to thwart competition and extract rents. Do antitrust law and competition policy effectively address questions of state action by showing respect for democracy and legitimate regulatory choices while at the same time preventing the worst excesses of interest group capture? Such questions have recently arisen with respect to the continuing evolution of the state action immunity doctrine in cases like the Supreme Court's 2015 decision in North Carolina Board of Dental Examiners v. FTC and in struggles between new and incumbent technologies in industries such as riding sharing services (e.g., Uber) and automotive distribution (e.g., Tesla). This panel will examine the interfaces between competition policy and state regulation and consider what is working well and what could be improved.

Conflict-of-laws codifications dominate much of the non-common law world and have recently made inroads into common law jurisdictions, including two U.S. states. This program will explore some of the aspects of major codifications, including the European Union's Rome regulations and China's new codification. As work begins on the Restatement (Third) of the Conflict of Laws an important question is what, if any, lessons can be learned from experience with conflict-of-laws codes, and whether those codes should influence the new Restatement.

SECTION ON CONTRACTS*Sutton South, Second Floor, New York Hilton MidtownBraided Contracting and the Interplay of Formal and Informal Enforcement Strategies in Contract Relationships*Moderator: Ethan Leib, Fordham University School of LawSpeakers:

Lisa E. Bernstein, The University of Chicago, The Law School

Wendy Netter Epstein, DePaul University College of Law
Robert E. Scott, Columbia University School of Law

Much of the literature about relational contract theory in recent decades has focused on whether courts should enforce contracts in strict, formalist manner, or whether they should use less formal, relational norms that (it is often supposed) the parties use to govern their relationships privately. Now, though, there is a new trend in both literature and practice of trying to use contracts to create trusting relationships among businesses not by threat of strict enforcement, but rather by creating “low enforcement” structures of information sharing and dispute resolution that allow parties to ease into collaborative relationships in a way that minimizes risk. Such contracts are called “braided” contracts because they intertwine more formal and less formal enforcement mechanisms. They are thought to be particularly useful in certain circumstances, such as conditions of high uncertainty (e.g., rapidly changing industries based on scientific research or developing technologies); parties who are not only non-vertically-integrated, but may actually be competitors; and situations where what counts as adequate performance is either hard to specify ex ante or hard to verify ex post.

Richard H. Fallon, Jr., Harvard Law School

Vicki C. Jackson, Harvard Law School

John F. Manning, Harvard Law School

Henry P. Monaghan, Columbia University School of Law

Judith Resnik, Yale Law School

This program will consider the impact of the work of the late Professor Daniel J. Meltzer on the field of Federal Courts. Professor Meltzer was a professor of law at Harvard Law School from 1982 to 2015, and wrote numerous scholarly articles relating to federal courts and federal jurisdiction. He was also a co-author of the leading casebook, Hart & Wechsler's The Federal Courts and the Federal System.

Ira Burnim, Legal Director, Judge David L. Bazelon Center for Mental Health Law, Washington, D.C.

Robert D. Dinerstein, American University, Washington College of Law

Speaker from a Call for Papers: Jasmine Elwick Harris, University of California, Davis, School of Law

The Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (the “ADA”) is now 25 years old. Its sweeping prohibitions and mandates have, both figuratively and literally, restructured American society. Some argue that it went too far; some not far enough. Still others advocate change in different directions. This panel focuses on one category of protected individuals: people with mental disabilities. Though there may be fewer physical barriers for this group, social barriers like stigma and tolerance for discrimination are generally more pronounced. We take stock of what the ADA and its amendments have accomplished for people with mental disabilities and what has been left undone.

SECTION ON LAW LIBRARIES AND LEGAL INFORMATION*Bowery, Lower Level, Sheraton New York Times Square HotelLaw Library Innovation: How Law Libraries are Adapting to New Standards and Institutional Challenges*Moderator: Steven D. Hinckley, The Pennsylvania State University – Penn State LawSpeakers:

Femi Cadmus, Cornell Law School

Joan S. Howland, University of Minnesota Law School

Lee Peoples, Oklahoma City University School of Law

Gordon Russell, Lincoln Memorial University Duncan School of Law

Michael Whiteman, Northern Kentucky University, Salmon P. Chase College of Law

Law libraries exist today in a dynamic, fast-changing environment. Recently adopted ABA Standards are prompting law libraries to rethink collections, services, and staffing. Curricular changes, new degree programs, and the rapid cancellation of our remaining print sources are driving new approaches to collection building and space planning. A steep decline in the size of entering classes is causing a detailed re-examination of law school and law library budgets. This program will explore innovative approaches that law libraries are developing to adapt to these new realities, and will discuss opportunities for making positive programmatic changes to better support our constituents and our parent institutions in a time of dynamic professional transition.

Integrating Non-Traditional Populations into Law Schools*Moderator: John N. Riccardi, Boston University School of LawSpeakers:

Megan Bess, Loyola University Chicago School of Law

Camille deJorna, Associate Consultant, American Bar Association Section on Legal Education and Admissions to the Bar, Chicago, IL

Hope Kentnor, University of Denver Sturm College of Law

William Powers, The John Marshall Law School

This panel explores the challenges of integrating non-traditional (non-JD) populations—non-lawyers, online students, foreign/domestic LLMs, certificate students – into a law school. The pressure to enroll more post- and non-JD students is nothing new. But what happens when these “more and more varied” non-JD cohorts actually arrive? Does simply handing off non-lawyers to your LLM office make sense? What about slotting them into the school’s pre-existing JD infrastructure? And how might some options implicate the ABA’s “acquiescence” (do no harm) standards for reviewing non-JD programs? The underlying assumption is that schools have been quick to develop—or are developing—strategies to enroll more non-JD populations, but have spent less time thinking strategically about resource allocation issues. Career advice for non-lawyers? Community building for online students? Targeted academic support for foreign students? The new kids will likely have non-traditional needs and expectations. But who has the competencies (let alone bandwidth) to take them on? Once they arrive, will you find yourself “retrofitting” them into pre-existing functional silos—or perhaps just “winging it” as best you can? Come hear from experienced colleagues on the important issues to consider when you welcome the new kids on the block.

SECTION ON PART-TIME DIVISION PROGRAMS, CO-SPONSORED BY PRELEGAL EDUCATION AND ADMISSION TO LAW SCHOOL*Gramercy West, Second Floor, New York Hilton MidtownHot Topics in Part-Time Legal Education*Moderator: Tracy L. Simmons, University of the Pacific, McGeorge School of LawSpeakers:

Lisa M. Gear, Southwestern Law School

Michael H. Schwartz, University of Arkansas at Little Rock,

William H. Bowen School of Law

Sondra R. Tennessee, University of Houston Law Center

Delivering quality legal education and keeping students engaged can be challenging. When you add part-time as a factor in legal education, the challenges become more daunting. Each speaker will share an issue related to part-time education that he or she has faced and how that situation was resolved or is currently being addressed. What are the lessons learned and the best business practices that we can implement in our own institutions? The audience members will also have an opportunity to share their challenges and best practices.

A first “look back” at the ground-breaking inaugural year of the New York State Pro Bono Scholars Program, a program designed to allow students in their final year of law school to devote their last semester of study to performing pro bono service through an approved externship program, law school clinic, legal services provider, law firm or corporation. This experienced group of panelists will provide perspective on the genesis and goals of the program, its initial implementation in the fifteen New York State law schools, details on the development of the academic components of the program, lessons learned from the first year of the program, possible planned modifications for the future, and possible implications for the program nationally.

SECTION ON REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS*Regent Parlor, Second Floor, New York Hilton MidtownRegulation of Mortgage Lending*Moderator: Julie P. Forrester, Southern Methodist University, Dedman School of LawSpeakers:

Kathleen C. Engel, Suffolk University Law School
 Patricia A. McCoy, Boston College Law School
 Steven L. Schwarcz, Duke University School of Law

Speaker from a Call for Papers: Christopher K. Odinet, Southern University Law Center

In reaction to the financial crisis and after a period characterized by very little federal regulation of mortgage lending, Congress enacted the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act in 2010. Dodd-Frank changed the landscape of mortgage lending regulation. It created the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, imposed requirements that lenders confirm a borrower's ability to repay, limited federal preemption of state consumer financial protection laws, prohibited steering of borrowers to high interest rate loans, and imposed other new limits and requirements on mortgage lending. This program will consider issues such as the scope and application of the current regulatory framework, its impact on the availability of credit, whether it is the appropriate level of regulation, whether it is correctly focused, and whether the right parties are protected.

WORKSHOP FOR PRETENURED LAW SCHOOL TEACHERS OF COLOR*Gramercy, Lower Level, Sheraton New York Times Square Hotel*

AALS would like to thank the Law School Admission Council for their generous grant in support of this Workshop.

Minority law teachers face special challenges in the legal academy, starting from their first day of teaching. At this workshop, diverse panels of experienced and successful law professors will offer ways to successfully meet these challenges as they arise in the context of scholarship, teaching, service, and the tenure process. By bringing together faculty who are navigating similar career paths, the workshop will facilitate development of relationships that can provide long-term sources of support.

The workshop will be of interest to all law school faculty of color who are navigating the tenure process and looking for guidance and encouragement.

See the complete description for this extended program on page 63.

SECTION ON AGRICULTURAL AND FOOD LAW, ENVIRONMENTAL LAW, AND NATURAL RESOURCES AND ENERGY LAW JOINT PROGRAM*Rendezvous Trianon, Third Floor, New York Hilton MidtownEngaging Students in Real-World Problem Solving: An Interactive Workshop*Moderator: Kalyani Robbins, Florida International University College of LawSpeakers:

H. Jordan Diamond, University of California, Berkeley School of Law
 Michael B. Gerrard, Columbia University School of Law
 Tracy Hester, University of Houston Law Center
 Becky L. Jacobs, University of Tennessee College of Law
 Sarah A. Krakoff, University of Colorado School of Law
 Laurie Ristino, Vermont Law School

Law schools are increasingly looking for ways to engage students in real-world problem solving beyond traditional clinical education and externship programs. This effort is driven by the 2007 Carnegie Foundation report, societal criticism of the value and cost of legal education, and by creative pedagogy that is being increasingly applied in the environment, resources, energy, and the emerging food and agriculture arenas because of the need to address systems-scale problems. Here, students benefit from student and faculty engagement in real-world problem solving. For example, law programs around the country are involving students in examining and creating legal structures that can accommodate renewable energy, facilitate the growth of sustainable food systems, address ecosystem management challenges, and deal with complex climate challenges. The format for this program will be interactive. The representatives of the six selected programs will provide short presentations on their programs. The moderator will then open the discussion to the audience so that attendees have the opportunity to engage in a robust, generative dialogue with the panelists and with each other. The result, we hope, is a better understanding of how to build and manage these programs, more opportunities for students, and new capacity to solve important problems.

AALS CROSSCUTTING PROGRAM

Sutton Center, Second Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

Reforming Law and Scholarship by Disciplinary Design

Moderator and Speaker: SpearIt, Texas Southern University Thurgood Marshall School of Law

Speakers:

Jessie Allen, University of Pittsburgh School of Law
 Jeff A. Redding, Saint Louis University School of Law
 L. Song Richardson, University of California, Irvine School of Law
 Carlton M. Waterhouse, Indiana University Robert H. McKinney School of Law

This roundtable discussion explores the potential for interdisciplinary design to improve legal institutions and education. In recent years, the push toward interdisciplinary scholarship and teaching has grown stronger in the legal academy, but there has been little quality control over what constitutes “interdisciplinary.” Determining exactly what makes a project interdisciplinary is not self-evident, and sometimes, rather than by careful design and methodology, haphazard projects are self-deemed “interdisciplinary” merely because ideas, methods, or models are imported from other fields of study. Sometimes, however, this is done with little mastery in field, or worse, the inability to use knowledge effectively due to a lack of training in that very field.

Against this existential backdrop, this roundtable discussion explores how interdisciplinary approaches can be applied to improve the law as well as legal scholarship and education. It builds from the premise that understanding law is inextricable from understanding individuals, institutions, and society, and that all are critical to the project of legal reform. The discussion will focus on gender studies, psychology, ritual theory, and modes of studying law through multiple subject areas.

AALS HOT TOPIC PROGRAM

Gramercy West, Second Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

Grappling With Campus Rape

Moderator: Donna K. Coker, University of Miami School of Law

Speakers:

Michelle J. Anderson, City University of New York School of Law
 Cynthia Garrett, Attorney and Member of FACE Board of Directors, Families Advocating for Campus Equality (FACE), Spartanburg, SC
 Aya Gruber, University of Colorado School of Law
 Mary P. Koss, Regents’ Professor, University of Arizona College of Health, Tuscon, AZ
 Tamara Rice Lave, University of Miami School of Law
 Sejal Singh, Student Engagement Organizer, Know Your IX, New York, NY
 Deborah Tuerkheimer, Northwestern University Pritzker School of Law
 Corey Rayburn Yung, University of Kansas School of Law

High-profile cases like that of former Florida State quarterback Jameis Winston have brought a much-needed spotlight to campus rape. Some studies show that as many as one in four women have been sexually assaulted while in college. The White House is demanding that universities take action, and the Department of Education has threatened to withhold federal funding from those that do not adequately respond. Although everyone agrees that something must be done, figuring out what to do is difficult.

This program tackles arguably the most significant challenge facing universities today. The goal is not just to provide a critical overview of what is happening on campuses but also to offer guidance on what universities should be doing. Panelists will start at the most basic level by considering how rape and sexual assault should be defined. They will also address how campuses should adjudicate campus assault by critically examining the protections being provided and suggesting what is necessary to satisfy the demands of fairness and procedural due process. The panel will also consider alternatives to formal adjudication, including restorative justice.

Universities must do a better job of protecting their students, and this program will present research on risk factors for sexual assault and measures that have proven effective at countering them. It will also look critically at universities' performances in investigating and adjudicating rape. Finally, the program will go to the front lines to hear from advocates who are fighting for the rights of victims and the accused.

10:30 am – 12:15 pm

SECTION ON ADMINISTRATIVE LAW*Nassau East, Second Floor, New York Hilton MidtownBeyond Leg/Reg: Designing a Broader Regulatory Practice Curriculum

Moderator: Kristin E. Hickman, University of Minnesota Law School

Speakers:

Lisa S. Bressman, Vanderbilt University Law School
 Cary Coglianese, University of Pennsylvania Law School
 Geoffrey P. Miller, New York University School of Law
 Sidney A. Shapiro, Wake Forest University School of Law
 Daniel Sokol, University of Florida Fredric G. Levin College of Law
 Matthew C. Stephenson, Harvard Law School

Many JD students are headed for careers that focus primarily on dealing with government regulation and regulatory compliance—whether for government agencies themselves or in the private sector— as opposed to transactional or litigation practice. Many law schools have acknowledged the significance of statutes and government agencies for contemporary legal practice by adopting first-year Legislation and Regulation or Regulatory State courses. That trend is still relatively nascent, however, and even fewer law schools have developed a regulatory practice track or even given serious thought to what such a curriculum might look like. Participants on this panel will stretch beyond the debate over adopting a single, first-year course to contemplate a more comprehensive set of courses and methods for teaching JD students interested in regulatory practice.

The Section held a virtual business meeting in advance of the Annual Meeting.

SECTION ON BALANCE IN LEGAL EDUCATION, CO-SPONSORED BY ACADEMIC SUPPORT*Sutton North, Second Floor, New York Hilton MidtownFinding Your Voice in the Legal Academy

Moderator: Richard C. Reuben, University of Missouri School of Law

Speakers:

Dustin Benham, Texas Tech University School of Law
 Rhonda Magee, University of San Francisco School of Law
 Teri McMurtry-Chubb, Track, Mercer University School of Law
 Camille A. Nelson, Suffolk University Law School

Legal academics often come from practice, and just as often face the challenge of establishing their new academic voices in a number of different contexts—in the classroom, in their scholarship, and in faculty governance. This is a process that can take years of personal and professional growth, and in this panel, we bring together different voices to discuss how best to accomplish this important task. The format will be interactive to allow for broad discussion and the exchange of experiences and ideas.

10:30 am – 12:15 pm

SECTION ON CIVIL PROCEDURE, CO-SPONSORED BY LITIGATION*Beekman Parlor, Second Floor, New York Hilton MidtownDiscussion of Potential Class Action Reforms with the Advisory Committee on Civil Rules

Moderator: Judith Resnik, Yale Law School

Speakers:

Elizabeth Chamblee Burch, University of Georgia School of Law
 Robert M. Dow, Jr., District Judge, United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Chicago, IL
 Olatunde C. Johnson, Columbia University School of Law
 Robert H. Klonoff, Lewis and Clark Law School
 Stephen C. Robinson, Partner and former Judge on the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York, Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom LLP, New York, NY
 Peter L. Zimroth, Senior Counsel and Director of New York University School of Law Center on Civil Justice, Arnold & Porter LLP, New York, NY

This panel will provide an opportunity to discuss and comment on potential amendments to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23. A subcommittee of the Advisory Committee on Civil Rules is analyzing several preliminary proposals that would alter how class actions are certified, managed, and resolved. The program will consist of a presentation by the subcommittee, comments from panelists, and comments from audience members. We plan to have a wide-ranging discussion of items on the subcommittee's current agenda as well as additional suggestions for the subcommittee to consider. The subcommittee's most recent report will be distributed through the Section on Civil Procedure's listserv and will be available from <http://www.uscourts.gov/rules-policies/records-and-archives-rules-committees>.

SECTION ON CRIMINAL JUSTICE

Sutton South, Second Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

Predicting Trouble: Risk, Technology, and a Data-Driven Criminal Justice System

Moderator and Speaker: Andrew G. Ferguson, University of the District of Columbia, David A. Clarke School of Law

Speakers:

Shima Baughman, University of Utah, S. J. Quinney College of Law

Andrea Roth, University of California, Berkeley School of Law

Kami C. Simmons, Wake Forest University School of Law
Christopher Slobogin, Vanderbilt University Law School

The criminal justice system's long experimentation with risk assessment and predictive analytics has reached a tipping point. Police algorithms now predict areas of criminal activity and even individual suspects. Court systems use predictive metrics to determine who should be released on bail and which sentences to impose. Forensic science uses new techniques to predict the likely culprit out of millions of suspects. The rise of data and risk-based analysis raises real questions in a criminal justice system still impacted by systemic race and class-based inequities. In addition, this change invites serious inquiry into how the data is being used and the technologies implemented. This panel looks at new predictive technologies, addressing issues of predictive policing, surveillance, DNA and forensic science, race, jury selection, sentencing and the constitutional concerns of new predictive technologies. Specifically, panelists will analyze predictive risk assessment for pre-trial release, investigation, policing, jury selection, sentencing, and the adequacy of defense counsel. The overarching goal is to discuss the role of risk and draw lessons for the future from the innovative and troubling ways in which prediction is being used throughout the criminal justice system.

SECTION ON ELECTION LAW

Murray Hill East, Second Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

Election Law at the Local Level

Moderator: Joshua A. Douglas, University of Kentucky College of Law

Speakers:

Jocelyn F. Benson, Wayne State University Law School
Richard T. Ford, Stanford Law School

Trey Grayson, President & CEO, Northern Kentucky Chamber of Commerce, Fort Mitchell, KY

David Schleicher, Yale Law School

Speaker from a Call for Papers: Henry L. Chambers, Jr., The University of Richmond School of Law

Although national election controversies grab the headlines, decisions made at the local level impact our elections in important ways—and even contribute to those national issues. Local and state actors play a front-line role in administering elections for all levels of government. This panel will focus on how local jurisdictions handle important issues such as ballot access, voting rights, early voting, Election Day processes, and post-election disputes. Panelists will explain how these issues relate to the smooth running of the election, and how they might impact the 2016 presidential election season.

Papers will be published in the Election Law Journal.

SECTION ON LABOR RELATIONS AND EMPLOYMENT LAW, CO-SPONSORED BY STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT LAW

Gramercy East, Second Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

Local Laboratories of Workplace Regulation

Moderator: Jason R. Bent, Stetson University College of Law

Speakers:

Robert Bruno, Professor of Labor and Employment Relations and Director of Labor Education Program, University of Illinois School of Labor and Employment Relations, Champaign, IL

Scott L. Cummings, University of California, Los Angeles School of Law

Laurie Reynolds, University of Illinois College of Law

Speaker from a Call for Papers: Paul A. Diller, Willamette University College of Law

In recent years, local governments across the United States have enacted labor protections, including mandatory paid leave, a higher minimum wage, antidiscrimination measures, and wage theft protections. In response, several state legislatures have passed laws designed to preempt certain local regulation. May a local government, “if its citizens choose, serve as a laboratory to try experiments in workplace regulation ‘without risk to the rest of the country?’” For example, local ‘right-to-work’ laws have been adopted in a dozen Kentucky counties, and similar efforts were recently made in Illinois. Are these local laws permitted by the National Labor Relations Act? Are they good policy in any event? This program will cover these and other issues raised by the rise of local workplace regulation.

SECTION ON MINORITY GROUPS, CO-SPONSORED BY EMPLOYMENT DISCRIMINATION LAW AND WOMEN IN LEGAL EDUCATION

Bowery, Lower Level, Sheraton New York Times Square Hotel

The Dodd-Frank Act’s Fifth Anniversary: Diversity and Inclusion in the Leadership of the Financial Services Sector

Moderator: Sylvia Chin, Partner, White & Case LLP, New York, NY

Speakers:

Steven Ramirez, Loyola University Chicago School of Law
Julissa Reynoso, Partner, Chadbourne & Parke LLP, New York, NY
Darren Rosenblum, Pace University School of Law
Cheryl L. Wade, St. John’s University School of Law

Speaker from a Call for Papers: Cary Martin, DePaul University College of Law

Five years ago Congress acknowledged a persistent lack of diversity in the financial services industry and adopted Section 342 of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act of 2010. Section 342 of the Dodd-Frank Act directs nine federal financial regulatory agencies to create an office of inclusion to ensure the fair inclusion and utilization of minorities in their workforces. Section 342 also directs each agency to assess the diversity policies and practices of the private sector entities contracting with the agency or regulated by the agency. Six of the agencies proposed joint standards to provide guidance on the scope of the required assessment. The Proposed Standards, however, remain proposed and have been the subject of significant commentary from various segments of the financial community. This program will explore whether Section 342 and the Proposed Standards have led to true progress towards advancing diversity in the financial services industry since Dodd-Frank. The program will explore a broad array of topics regarding diversity and inclusion in the financial services industry and leadership in public service and corporate boardrooms.

Program papers will be published in Washington & Lee Law Review.

SECTION ON POVERTY LAW

Regent Parlor, Second Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

New Directions in Poverty Law

Moderator: Wendy A. Bach, University of Tennessee College of Law

Speakers:

Khiara M. Bridges, Boston University School of Law
Susannah Camic Tahk, University of Wisconsin Law School

Joseph R. Fishkin, The University of Texas School of Law

Speaker from a Call for Papers: Rory Van Loo, Yale Law School

This program will focus on emerging ideas, problems, and strategies related to poverty law. The field of poverty law encompasses a wide range of legal issues that affect the lives of Americans living in poverty. Much interesting work in this area is being done by academics who may not identify themselves as poverty law scholars, but who are nonetheless writing about issues that inform and intersect with the core concerns of poverty law. This program will provide a forum for discussing some of this scholarship, and for considering the current state of poverty law as a field. Panelists—including one chosen through a call for papers—will present recent works on a variety of topics that relate to poverty law, including privacy rights, equal opportunity, tax, and consumer law. An open discussion will follow.

SECTION ON BIOLAW, CO-SPONSORED BY LAW, MEDICINE AND HEALTH CARE*Nassau West, Second Floor, New York Hilton MidtownNext Generation Sequencing, Precision Medicine, and the Future of Health Care*Moderator: Robert A. Bohrer, California Western School of LawSpeakers:

Toby Bloom, Deputy Scientific Director, Informatics, The New York Genome Center, New York, NY

Barbara J. Evans, Director, Program in Pharmacogenomics, University of Houston Law Center

Eileen M. Kane, The Pennsylvania State University – Penn State Law

Speakers from a Call for Papers:

Jorge Contreras, University of Utah, S. J. Quinney College of Law

Jordan Paradise, Seton Hall University School of Law

The pace of innovation in medicine and health care is accelerating. The first human genome was sequenced at a cost of almost three billion dollars and 13 years. The rapid progress in next generation sequencing has enabled an individual genome to be sequenced at a cost of one thousand dollars in less than three days. Next generation sequencing is transforming disease diagnosis, drug development, and the practice of medicine. This program will explore many of the legal issues raised by the parallel developments of sequencing technology, massive databases of electronic medical records, and bioinformatics. The FDA has begun to change its regulatory approach to laboratory testing and diagnostics, pharmaceutical companies are changing their approach to drug development, and doctors are scrambling to understand and adjust to the changes in science and technology. Anyone interested in the interaction of law and technology or the future of health care is encouraged to attend.

K. Sabeel Rahman, Brooklyn Law School

In 1976, the Journal of Financial Economics published “Theory of the Firm: Managerial Behavior, Agency Costs and Ownership Structure” by Michael Jensen and William Meckling. Soon, these economists’ (and others’) ideas migrated into the world of legal scholarship and strongly influenced fundamental concepts of property rights, share ownership, and the obligations of corporate leaders. In the 1980s and 1990s, Law and Economics dominated corporate law and theory. Then came the pushback. Critics argued that the Law and Economics movement had created perverse incentives for managers, advocated that stakeholders other than share owners played an important role in corporate law, and advanced critiques from behavioral economics and behavioral finance. Where are we now? How, if at all, will economics and finance scholarship shape the next decade of corporate law scholarship? What is the next big idea? Or have we, once again, reached “the end of corporate law?”

At the conclusion of the program, the officers of the Section on Business Associations would like to honor 13 faculty members for their mentorship work throughout the year. Please join us as we applaud their exemplary mentorship and good work. They are: Lynne L. Dallas (San Diego); Claire M. Dickerson (Tulane) (posthumous); Christopher R. Drahozal (Kansas); Egon Guttman (American); William A. “Bill” Klein (UCLA); Donald C. Langevoort (Georgetown); Juliet M. Moringiello (Widener Commonwealth); Marleen O’Connor (Stetson); Terry O’Neill (Emerita, Tulane); Charles “Chuck” R. T. O’Kelley (Seattle); Alyssa Christmas Rollock (formerly of Indiana-Bloomington); Roberta Romano (Yale); and D. Gordon Smith (BYU).

The Section on Business Associations held a virtual business meeting in advance of the Annual Meeting.

SECTION ON CLINICAL LEGAL EDUCATION*Bowery, Lower Level, Sheraton New York Times Square HotelExamining the Value of Clinical Education: Thinking Beyond Cost*Moderator: Tirien Steinbach, University of California, Berkeley School of LawSpeakers:

Luz E. Herrera, University of California, Los Angeles School of Law

Robert R. Kuehn, Washington University in St. Louis School of Law

Jaime Lee, University of Baltimore School of Law

David Anthony Santacroce, The University of Michigan Law School

This panel of clinical educators will inform and engage attendees on the question of the value of clinical education—understanding it and measuring it. We will examine the trope of clinical education being “costly” by drawing upon existing studies of the factors that go into the finances of clinical education relative to other parts of the curriculum. Beyond cost, we want to help the audience identify the many different ways clinics add value to our students, to our institutions, to our communities, and to the legal profession. We aim to name these ways of understanding value, as specifically as possible, but with the understanding that the actual value will very much be a school-by-school calculation. Finally, we want to engage the participants in the vital question of how we measure value, building from existing experience in measuring cost, and thinking about how the value measurement might relate to the kind of results measurement that law schools are engaged in more broadly. We hope participants will come away with a framework they can adapt at their own institutions, and have a conversation about what is missing from discussions of value at our respective institutions, and how best we can improve the quality of those discussions.

SECTION ON CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

Beekman Parlor, Second Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

On Resistance and Recognition

Moderator: Martha L. Minow, Harvard Law School

Speakers:

Josh Blackman, South Texas College of Law

Erwin Chemerinsky, University of California, Irvine School of Law

Charlton C. Copeland, University of Miami School of Law

Rachel F. Moran, University of California, Los Angeles School of Law

Robert Nelson, Professor of Sociology, Northwestern University Department of Sociology, Chicago, IL

With the Supreme Court reaching a tipping point in terms of its composition, and the Court’s opinions renegotiating the parameters of reproductive justice, racial justice and same-sex marriage under the 14th Amendment, voting rights, political equality, and the scope of federal authority relative to state authority, our goal with this program is to create a space to discuss the overall issue of resistance and recognition. What does resistance and recognition mean? Are they even possible, and if so, under what conditions? Are we limited to the forms of resistance and request for recognition pursued in the Civil Rights Era? Does resistance require direct negation of government policy, regulation, or structures? Or can/should we expand our understanding to include things like a transvaluation of constitutional memory or a reconstruction of subjectivity as a means to assert rights for recognition under the Constitution? The participants in this panel will offer a variety of perspectives on thinking about resistance and recognition under the Constitution. The larger aim of the panel is to open up a conversation about the possibilities for the formation of a discourse of resistance and recognition under the Constitution in the 21st century.

SECTION ON DISABILITY LAW, CO-SPONSORED BY LAW AND MENTAL DISABILITY, LAW, MEDICINE AND HEALTH CARE

Sutton Center, Second Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

The Wounded Warrior Comes Home: Exploring the Impact of Disabled Veterans on Disability, Health, and Other Law and Policy

Moderator: Cheryl L. Anderson, Southern Illinois University School of Law

Speaker: Jennifer Sheehy, Acting Assistant Secretary, U.S. Department of Labor, Washington, D.C.

Speakers from a Call for Papers:

Rabia Belt, Stanford Law School

Isis Marrero, Assistant Professor, University of South Florida College of Medicine, Tampa, FL

Stacey-Rae Simcox, Stetson University College of Law

About a century ago, returning war veterans with disabilities helped shift cultural and legal attitudes from the charitable model to the rehabilitation model. Today’s soldiers often survive injuries that would have been fatal in prior combat engagements, leaving them with even more significant physical impairments. There is also a growing understanding of the scope of mental impairments associated with military service. At the same time, disability has shifted from something personal that the individual must work to overcome, to something largely attributable to societal choices. We now recognize equal opportunity for individuals with disabilities is a matter of civil rights. Veterans with disabilities may once again play a significant role in shaping the future of disability rights law and health care norms. Beyond those topics, veterans with disabilities may affect criminal law, employee benefits law, and tax law, to name a few. This panel will explore the contemporary impact of veterans with disabilities on our law, including how law and policy can be more responsive to their needs and the needs of those with whom they interact, and how their unique status may inform various normative conversations.

SECTION ON EDUCATION LAW

Petit Trianon, Third Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

Reconciling Education Law, Policy and Governance Under Changing Leadership

Moderator: Tiffani N. Darden, Michigan State University College of Law

Speakers:

Derek W. Black, Tenure, University of South Carolina School of Law

Michael A. Rebell, Columbia University School of Law

Kimberly Jenkins Robinson, The University of Richmond School of Law

Education Law, continued

Speaker from a Call for Papers: Natalie M. Gomez-Velez,
City University of New York School of Law

The upcoming presidential election should reinvigorate conversation across the nation about public education and a comprehensive reform agenda. The federal government holds joint authority with states to control equitable education norms and to develop programs for realizing quality education goals. The interaction between federal and state governments on implementation and accountability issues, including the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, as related to No Child Left Behind's reauthorization, Common Core standards, and immigrant students, make any state's responsiveness to federal policies a national concern with generational consequences. This panel will identify prevalent issues regarding federal education reform. Panelists will provide perspectives on the intersection between law and policy, systemic challenges confronting advocates, and viable forward paths. Attendees will be encouraged to participate in the question and answer period following the panel presentation.

SECTION ON GRADUATE PROGRAMS FOR NON-U.S. LAWYERS

Murray Hill West, Second Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

Recruiting LL.M. Students: Promises, Expectations, Resources, and Realities

Moderators:

Lauren Fielder, The University of Texas School of Law
Mark E. Wojcik, The John Marshall Law School

Speakers:

Mary Campbell Gallagher, Ph.D., President, Barwrite and Barwrite Press, New York, NY
John Smagula, Temple University, James E. Beasley School of Law

Speakers from a Call for Papers:

Sammy M. Mansour, Michigan State University College of Law
Jeffrey Ellis Thomas, University of Missouri-Kansas City School of Law

With declining enrollments of U.S. students, many law schools in the United States increasingly try to recruit international LL.M. students. This interactive discussion will consider effective recruiting techniques, promises made to incoming students, and the reasonable expectations that LL.M. students will have for their LL.M. studies and after they graduate. The program will also consider resources schools should offer for academic support, legal research and writing support, social engagement, professional career counseling, and bar exam preparation.

SECTION ON LAW AND SOUTH ASIAN STUDIES

Murray Hill East, Second Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

Environmental Futures: South Asia's Law and Policy Challenges

Moderator: Deepa Badrinarayana, Chapman University Dale E. Fowler School of Law

Speakers:

David E. Adelman, The University of Texas School of Law
Joshua C. Gellers, Assistant Professor, University of North Florida Department of Political Science and Public Administration, Jacksonville, FL
Michael B. Gerrard, Columbia University School of Law
Sharmila Murthy, Suffolk University Law School
Nicholas A. Robinson, Pace University School of Law

Economic development is a priority for most South Asian economies to reduce poverty and related problems. Development, however, brings with it numerous environmental challenges, from water scarcity to pollution. Some countries will also bear the brunt of problems they did not create, such as climate change. These problems are exacerbated by a deficit in the rule of law in many of these countries. This roundtable discussion will engage experts and scholars in evaluating the environmental challenges facing South Asian economies.

Congress and the Courts: A Conversation with the Chief Judge Bob Katzmann and Senator Chuck Schumer on Modern Statutes and the Interbranch Relationship

Moderators:

Richard Briffault, Columbia University School of Law
Abbe Gluck, Yale Law School

Speakers:

Robert Katzmann, Chief Judge, U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, New York, NY
Charles E. Schumer, U.S. Senator for New York, U.S. Senate - Office of Senator Charles E. Schumer, Washington, D.C.

How well do the courts and Congress understand one another? Can they? Should they? Would a better understanding of how Congress drafts legislation affect how judges interpret federal statutes? Would a better understanding of how the courts approach interpretive questions affect how Congress drafts federal statutes? Two of the nation's most important experts on this question—Chief Judge Robert A. Katzmann of the Second Circuit and U.S. Senator Charles Schumer—will discuss these questions in a moderated conversation with the Section.

SECTION ON TAXATION, CO-SPONSORED BY PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY

Nassau East, Second Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

Advising Taxpayers in the 21st Century: Ethical Challenges

Moderator: Michael B. Lang, Chapman University Dale E. Fowler School of Law

Speakers:

Allison Christians, Associate Professor, H. Heward Stikeman Chair in the Law of Taxation, McGill University, Montréal, Québec, Canada

Heather M. Field, University of California, Hastings College of the Law

Linda Galler, Maurice A. Deane School of Law at Hofstra University

Tanina Rostain, Georgetown University Law Center
Bryan C. Skarlatos, Partner, Kostelanetz & Fink, LLP, New York, NY

Fundamental ethical principles do not generally change, but the context in which tax advisers must assess their duties does. Changes in the business, economic and political world pose challenges for tax advisers who must interpret their ethical duties and obligations in new circumstances. In the second decade of the 21st century we see: (1) tremendous internationalization of business (a taxpayer need not be a multinational to engage in cross border commerce); (2) back-office functions regularly performed offshore; (3) increasing audit activity outside the U.S.; (4) global focus on information sharing and disclosure; (5) new interest in whistleblowing; (6) the rise of social media; (7) increasing interest by bar associations in pro bono obligations; and (7) and the growing role of electronic technology. These developments generate broader questions regarding: (1) the risks and benefits of advances in technology and communication; (2) how to advise clients in the face of increasing disclosure and reporting requirements; (3) the implications of a multinational legal practice; (4) the tensions at play in tax planning, minimization, and avoidance; and (5) ethical obligations to foreign jurisdictions. Drawing upon a range of experiences and perspectives, this panel will explore the pressing ethical challenges facing the contemporary tax adviser.

SECTION ON TEACHING METHODS, CO-SPONSORED BY CIVIL PROCEDURE

Rendezvous Trianon, Third Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

The Pedagogy of Procedure: Using Civil Procedure to Showcase Innovative Teaching Methods

Moderators:

Patti Alleva, University of North Dakota School of Law
Jennifer A. Gundlach, Maurice A. Deane School of Law at Hofstra University

Speakers:

Christine Bartholomew, SUNY Buffalo Law School
Brooke D. Coleman, Seattle University School of Law
Susan M. Gilles, Capital University Law School
Cynthia M. Ho, Loyola University Chicago School of Law
David B. Oppenheimer, University of California, Berkeley School of Law
Elizabeth G. Thornburg, Southern Methodist University, Dedman School of Law
Angela K. Upchurch, Southern Illinois University School of Law

This program is designed for teachers of any subject, but especially Civil Procedure, who wish to explore new strategies for enhancing understanding of the doctrine, and for engaging students deeply and differently through the use of intentional and innovative pedagogy before, during, and after class. Civil Procedure is an excellent subject of study for these new insights because of its universality and focus on the substance/procedure divide. It is also rich in opportunities to examine the three Carnegie pillars (knowledge, skills, and values), though doing so can be challenging, given that professors must balance pedagogic choices against the realities of credit limitations, bar exam coverage pressures, and broader curricular goals. With this in mind, the panel will begin by highlighting the importance of providing context for learning procedural concepts and then demonstrate approaches for doing so. The panel will then explore three of the most challenging Civil Procedure topics—the Twiqbal pleading requirements, personal jurisdiction, and discovery—and demonstrate dynamic approaches for maximizing learning in each area. Attendees will come away with concrete ideas for tackling both the theoretical and applied sides of Civil Procedure, as well as pedagogic strategies or techniques transferable to any course.

Papers will be published in the Journal of Legal Education.

Anita Bernstein, Brooklyn Law School
 John C. Goldberg, Harvard Law School

 John F. Witt, Yale Law School
 Benjamin C. Zipursky, Fordham University School of Law
 Aaron D. Twerski, Brooklyn Law School

On March 14, 1916, New York's high court issued its decision in MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co. Writing for the court, Judge (later Justice) Benjamin Cardozo held that product manufacturers must take care to manufacture products that do not injure consumers. A century later, MacPherson is considered a landmark of tort law, as well as an exemplar of common law reasoning. It is credited with, among other things, contributing to the demise of laissez-faire thinking in American law and laying the groundwork for the modern doctrine of strict products liability. Yet what the decision accomplished, both as a matter of tort doctrine and jurisprudence, also remains controversial. On the occasion of MacPherson's centenary, a panel of renowned scholars will examine the significance and influence of the case from multiple perspectives, including its influence of the evolution of the "risk society", its reception and influence in the United Kingdom and Europe, and its place in tort theory and private law in general.

Business meeting at program conclusion.

This program will center on the overlap between sex, gender or sexuality, and trusts and estates. Presenters were selected from a Call for Papers and topics include implications of same-sex marriage, assisted reproduction and property rights, feminist legal theory applied to property transmission or tax, or any other matter examining the intersection between sex and death.

AALS AND NATIONAL ACADEMIES OF SCIENCES, COMMITTEE ON SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY, AND LAW JOINT PROGRAM*Rendezvous Trianon, Third Floor, New York Hilton MidtownScience and the Law

Moderator: Jeremy Fogel, Senior U.S. District Judge, United States District Court for the Northern District of California, San Jose, CA

Speakers:

Harry T. Edwards, Chief Judge, US Court of Appeals, District of Columbia, Washington, DC
 Gladys Kessler, Senior Judge, United States District Court for the District of Columbia, Washington, DC
 Jed S. Rakoff, United States District Judge, United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, New York, NY

Lawyers and judges routinely confront complex issues of science and technology in the context of toxic torts, economic damages, medical malpractice, patent, and criminal cases. All of these involve the consideration of complex scientific and technical testimony in order to render a reasoned and principled judgment. Since the Supreme Court's decision in Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., judges and attorneys have on occasion struggled to apply standards of science and engineering to proffered expert testimony.

AALS LAW AND FILM SERIES

Empire West, Second Floor, Sheraton New York Times Square Hotel

The Documentary Film Selection: The Hunting Ground (2015)

Moderator: Jessica Silbey, Northeastern University School of Law

Commentator: Diane Rosenfeld, Harvard Law School

Sponsored by William S. Hein & Co., Inc.

The Hunting Ground is a 2015 documentary film about the epidemic of rape on American college campuses. The film follows several survivors of sexual assault as they encounter retaliation and pushback at every level of campus life. It details the lack of effective institutional response as the students discuss the failure of college administrators to support them and the toll reporting these crimes took on their lives. The film reunites writer and director Kirby Dick and producer Amy Ziering, the team behind the Oscar-nominated documentary The Invisible War. Join moderator Professor Jessica Silbey for a discussion after the film.

This session honors the memory of Professor Dennis Greene.

AALS SCHOLARLY PAPER PRESENTATION

Nassau East, Second Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

Moderator: Regina F. Burch, Associate Director,
Association of American Law Schools

Winner: Jill Fraley, Washington and Lee University
School of Law

To encourage and recognize excellent legal scholarship and to broaden participation by new law teachers in the Annual Meeting program, the association sponsored a call for papers for the 30th annual AALS Scholarly Papers Competition. Those who would have been full-time law teachers at an AALS member or fee-paid school for five years or less on July 1, 2015, were invited to submit a paper on a topic related to or concerning law. A committee of established scholars reviewed the submitted papers with the authors’ identities concealed. The author of the winning paper will present and discuss her paper at this session.

AALS HOT TOPIC PROGRAM

Petit Trianon, Third Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

Beyond Cellphone Evidence: Video Advocacy in Criminal Proceedings

Moderator: Daniel Kiel, The University of Memphis, Cecil C. Humphreys School of Law

Speakers:

Regina Austin, University of Pennsylvania Law School
Amber Baylor, Widener University Delaware Law School
Christina O. Spiesel, Adjunct, Quinnipiac University School of Law

Video has become a hot topic in the area of criminal justice as a result of the increasing use of cellphones to capture interactions between police and black citizens who wind of losing their lives during and after such encounters. The video footage, shot and widely disseminated on social media, of the treatment of Eric Garner, Freddie Gray, Sandra Bland, and Tamir Rice, among others, has sparked widespread social activism best exemplified by #BlackLivesMatter. Video, however, is more than the source of evidence in criminal cases. It is a tool of advocacy as reported in the national media like the New York Times. Sentencing mitigation, victim impact, and clemency are now the subject of legal advocacy videos made in connection with or for introduction in criminal proceedings. Furthermore, videos are widely used to support social justice campaigns aimed at promoting criminal justice reforms at the local and national level.

A group of law faculty, with both scholarly and practical expertise, have come together to discuss and promote the teaching and actual production of, visual advocacy in law schools. Members of the self-described “Working Group on the Production of Visual Advocacy and Scholarship in Law Schools (PVAS Working Group)” share the view that in the future the skillful and effective utilization of audiovisual digital media will be a measure of lawyer competency. Therefore, law schools should begin to offer media skills training to enable their graduates not only to advocate on behalf of their clients, but also to perform their ethical obligation to translate the complexities of the law for lay audiences and to promote greater understanding of and accountability by legal institutions, including the profession.

We will discuss the art of, and legal limitations on, capturing and interpreting candid police cellphone videos, as well as strategies for producing effective sentencing mitigation, clemency, and social justice videos. Actual examples of such works will be screened and discussed.

AALS ARC OF CAREER PROGRAM

Sutton North, Second Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

The AALS In Spite of Itself: How to Use the AALS for Professional Development Even If It Sometimes Makes You Mad

Moderator and Speaker: David V. Snyder, American University, Washington College of Law

Speakers:

Elizabeth A. Meyer, Professor, University of Virginia
Corcoran Department of History, Charlottesville, VA
Heidi Gorovitz Robertson, Cleveland-Marshall College of Law at Cleveland State University
Stephen J. Ware, University of Kansas School of Law
Christina E. Wells, University of Missouri School of Law

This session will take on some of the difficulties the AALS presents for many faculty members. The idea is to help faculty overcome the problems of the AALS and to use the organization to advance their careers. We will present strategies to address some of the difficulties, such as a culture of insiders, political correctness, scholarly faddishness, hierarchy, and bureaucracy. The goals are to help the people whom the AALS power structure seems to ignore, to allow them to feel less alone, to move them amicably past the problems, and thus to learn more about their fields, to have their ideas heard, to make contacts, and to advance their careers. Also, we will discuss how the AALS might improve itself for the benefit of all of its members.

SECTION ON CHILDREN AND THE LAW

Murray Hill East, Second Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

Childhood Trauma: the Roles of Law, Society, and Institutions in Identifying, Addressing and Reducing Childhood Trauma

Moderator: James G. Dwyer, William & Mary Law School

Speakers:

Sacha M. Coupet, Loyola University Chicago School of Law
Melissa Jonson-Reid, Professor of Social Work and Director of Center for Violence and Injury Prevention,
Washington University in St. Louis George Warren
Brown School of Social Work, St. Louis, MO
Susan V. Mangold, SUNY Buffalo Law School

Despite the therapeutic justice that law and society apply to children's encounters with violence and other trauma, child-serving agencies, courts, lawyers, and GALs can compound children's trauma by failing to recognize and address the traumatic effects of legal intervention and long-term effects of the trauma itself. This program will identify and address the trauma that brings children into juridical and administrative proceedings, as well as the jurogenic harms of the legal system itself. Disciplines outside of law have begun to radically rethink basic institutional and practice responses to childhood trauma. While foundations, non-profits, legal practitioners, and some model courts begin to develop trauma-informed guidelines for the child welfare and juvenile justice systems, the legal academy has not fully engaged in this important dialogue or fully interrogated the theoretical and practical implications of trauma-informed policies and practices for the child or within the institutions at the child, family, institution or policy levels. The emergence of legal scholarship on childhood trauma is a crucial component of multidisciplinary discussions on the proper way to consider and respond to childhood trauma. This panel will address childhood trauma from several perspectives in hopes of stimulating a scholarly debate on this emerging topic.

Speakers:

Daniel Halberstam, The University of Michigan
Law School
Steve Peers, Professor of Law, University of Essex
Department of Law, London, England,
United Kingdom

Discussant: Gráinne De Burca, New York University
School of Law

The refugee crisis in the Mediterranean has been rightly identified as the most serious legal and political challenge currently facing Europe. The crisis calls into question the legal architecture of the European Union and tests the limits of policy coordination among the member states. It calls as well for a reassessment of human rights and classical immigration law as frames for handling structural predicaments in the Global South. The purpose of this panel is to engage US and EU legal scholars in a discussion of ongoing legal responses to the Mediterranean crisis and similar emergencies, with the goal of pointing at limitations and possibilities in federal, supranational or international entities called to the rescue of the lost at sea.

Papers will be published in Boston University International Law Journal.

SECTION ON FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS AND CONSUMER FINANCIAL SERVICES

Gramercy West, Second Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

The Intersection of Politics and Financial Regulation

Moderator: Daniel Schwarcz, University of Minnesota
Law School

Speakers:

Kathryn Judge, Columbia University School of Law
Patricia A. McCoy, Boston College Law School
Saule T. Omarova, Cornell Law School

Speaker from a Call for Papers: Arthur E. Wilmarth, Jr.,
The George Washington University Law School

Both the rules and the enforcement of financial regulation are inevitably shaped by larger political forces. This panel will explore both the successes and the failures of recent financial regulatory reforms in overcoming political pressures, and the prospect that new reforms might advance the depoliticization of financial regulation. It will also examine what is at stake in this debate, and how the interaction of politics and financial regulation can result in clear winners and losers, for groups of individuals, types of institutions, and different regulatory systems. Finally, it will reflect on the potential dangers of delinking politics and financial regulation.

Law School Rankings – Perspectives of US News, Princeton Review, and National Jurist

Moderators:

David A. Brennan, University of Kentucky College of Law
Martin J. Katz, University of Denver Sturm College of Law

Speakers:

Jack Crittenden, Editor in Chief, The National Jurist,
San Diego, CA
Robert Franek, Senior Vice President, The Princeton Review, New York, NY
Robert Morse, Chief Data Strategist, U.S. News & World Report, Washington, D.C.

Law schools have a love-hate relationship with rankings. But how do those who do the rankings understand their mission and their role? This panel will provide insights into the inner workings of the three law school rankings most commonly used by prospective students: U.S. News, The Princeton Review, and National Jurist. The panelists will address such questions as the effect of competition among rankings, how prospective students can deal with information and rankings overload, how the rankings organizations gather information, their openness to feedback on their methodologies, and the potential unintended consequences of their methodologies. The panelists will then take questions from the audience.

SECTION ON LAW AND INTERPRETATION*Sutton South, Second Floor, New York Hilton MidtownThe Empirics of Legal Interpretation

Moderator: Emily M.S. Houh, University of Cincinnati College of Law

Speakers:

- A. Christopher Bryant, University of Cincinnati College of Law
- Devon Wayne Carbado, University of California, Los Angeles School of Law
- Veena Dubal, University of California, Hastings College of the Law
- Tracey L. Meares, Yale Law School

Legal empiricism—whether under the rubric of empirical legal studies, new legal realism, or any number of other “brands” of empirical study—is here to stay. That it has evolved since the 1990s from a “hot topic” into a methodological movement with real staying power is demonstrated not only by the broad and deep scholarly literature on various forms of legal empiricism, but also by the proliferation of workshops, conferences, and centers dedicated to how to “do” legal empiricism, both generally and within myriad specific contexts and sub-disciplines. This roundtable will explore, from various perspectives, how legal empiricism has influenced law and interpretation. How, for example, has legal empiricism been used to support and/or refute various theoretical claims associated with different “schools” of legal thought, ranging from critical race and feminist theory to law and economics? How should legal empiricism be used to assess the “success” of legal rules and/or sociolegal policies, what they mean, and what work they do, both descriptively and normatively? And given the many different contexts in which legal empiricism is used, what do those who “do” legal empiricism have to teach and learn from one another? These and other questions will be explored by roundtable participants.

Business meeting at program conclusion.

SECTION ON LAW AND THE SOCIAL SCIENCES*Sutton Center, Second Floor, New York Hilton MidtownSocial Science Expertise in Law Schools: What is the Added Value?

Moderator: Tom Tyler, Yale Law School

Speakers:

- Ajay K. Mehrotra, Director, American Bar Foundation, Chicago, IL
- Elizabeth E. Mertz, University of Wisconsin Law School
- Laura Beth Nielsen, Research Professor, American Bar Foundation, Chicago, IL
- Jennifer K. Robbennolt, University of Illinois College of Law

Law schools are increasingly hiring faculty with joint degrees in the social sciences, as well as people only trained in social science. This interdisciplinary panel discusses the value added by having these faculty within the law school community. Speakers will discuss both what their social science expertise contributes to their teaching and how it influences their law-related research. One issue is whether and how having more broadly trained faculty changes law schools in desirable/undesirable ways and another is the advantages and disadvantages of being a faculty member within a law school for those interested in developing a social science perspective on law.

SECTION ON NONPROFIT AND PHILANTHROPY LAW*Beekman Parlor, Second Floor, New York Hilton MidtownThe Philanthropic Sector and Radical Reform

Moderator: Jill S. Manny, New York University School of Law

Speakers:

- John D. Colombo, University of Illinois College of Law
- Khrista Johnson, Pepperdine University School of Law
- Ray D. Madoff, Boston College Law School
- Rob Reich, Professor of Political Science, Stanford University Department of Political Science, Stanford, CA
- Sarah E. Waldeck, Seton Hall University School of Law

Reforming the philanthropic sector is always in the news. Most legal proposals, however, are incremental in nature and attempt to fix one discrete problem at a time (for example, proposals to cap the value of the charitable deduction or limit deductions for conservation easements and car donations). This panel will discuss what radically reforming the philanthropic sector might look like, both legally and in practice. What is the role of the sector and what does it mean for it to be more effective? Should the standards for tax exemption be stricter? Should foundations, donor advised funds, or endowments be subject to increased payout requirements and limited life spans? How should donors and foundation managers allocate resources and prioritize projects? How do the limits on international giving affect the sector's impact? Would any other large-scale structural changes enhance the sector?

SECTION ON SEXUAL ORIENTATION AND GENDER IDENTITY ISSUES

Regent Parlor, Second Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

What's Next For the LGBT Movement after the Marriage Cases: Defects in Anti-Discrimination Laws and Religious Freedom Challenges

Moderator: Jason Palmer, Stetson University College of Law

Speaker: Nelson Tebbe, Brooklyn Law School

Speakers from a Call for Papers:

Carlos A. Ball, Professor of Law, Rutgers School of Law - Newark

Katie Eyer, Track, Rutgers School of Law - Camden

Stacey L. Sobel, Western State University College of Law

While marriage equality has been extended to lesbian and gay couples across the country, many states have enacted accommodations for entities and individuals who oppose these marriages on religious grounds. This panel will discuss the challenges that face the LGBT community post-marriage equality. First, the panel will address the need for the Supreme Court to clarify equal protection analysis for sexual orientation classifications. The panel will then explore how the marriage equality decisions, while representing important legal and social gains, fall short of guaranteeing the formal equality mandated by traditional anti-discrimination laws. Finally, the panel will discuss how accommodations made to non-profit actors create constitutional concerns when these accommodations shift the costs from religious actors onto same-sex couples or allow for-profit entities and government employees to refuse to abide by anti-discrimination obligations on First Amendment religious grounds.

QUALITATIVE/MIXED METHODS WORKSHOP

Gramercy, Lower Level, Sheraton New York Times Square Hotel

Speakers:

Bryant G. Garth, University of California, Irvine School of Law

Ajay K. Mehrotra, Director, American Bar Foundation, Chicago, IL

Elizabeth E. Mertz, University of Wisconsin Law School

Robert Nelson, Professor of Sociology, Northwestern University Department of Sociology, Chicago, IL

L. Song Richardson, University of California, Irvine School of Law

Matthew Shaw, Doctoral Fellow, American Bar Foundation, Chicago, IL

Carole Silver, Northwestern University Pritzker School of Law

Joyce S. Sterling, University of Denver Sturm College of Law

Riaz Tejani, Assistant Professor, Legal Studies, University of Illinois at Springfield, Springfield, IL

Tom Tyler, Yale Law School

This workshop will be held on Saturday, January 9, from 9:00 am - 5:00 pm and on Sunday, January 10, from 9:00 am - 12:00 pm. This year's workshop follows a different format than in previous years, eliminating the fee for a box lunch and offering an opportunity for small-group feedback on individual research projects for those who register for and attend the workshop. Participants are not required to have any specific equipment or preparation.

For a law professor conducting on-going empirical research, you can register for the Sunday morning session only. This new feature is designed to allow researchers opportunities for targeted feedback on their projects. Priority is given to participants who attend the entire workshop. "Alums" of previous AALS empirical workshops are welcome.

This workshop provides an overview of how to approach and assess empirical research including (1) best practices for formulating research questions; (2) matching questions to methods and data; (3) IRBs and research ethics; (4) options for data analysis; (5) funding possibilities; (6) cross-disciplinary research collaborations; and (7) approaches to publishing empirical research. No background in social science is required. On the one hand, the workshop provides guidance for law professors interested in drawing on qualitative, survey research and/or experimental social science studies pertinent to their research on law. On the other hand, it is also designed to support law professors who seek to augment their scholarship by using empirical methods.

During the lunchtime session on Saturday (bring your own lunch) and on Sunday morning, participants will have an opportunity for small-group targeted discussions that permit more time for individualized feedback.

SECTION ON ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION, CO-SPONSORED BY LAW AND MENTAL DISABILITY

Riverside Ballroom, Third Floor, Sheraton New York Times Square Hotel

The Modern Problem-Solving Court Movement: Taking Stock After 25 Years

Moderator: Cynthia J. Alkon, Texas A&M University School of Law

Speakers:

Richard C. Boldt, University of Maryland Francis King Carey School of Law
 Erin Collins, New York University School of Law
 Carol Fidler, Director of Mental Health and Alternative to Detention Programs, Center for Court Innovation, New York, NY
 Jamila Jefferson-Jones, University of Missouri-Kansas City School of Law
 E. Lea Johnston, University of Florida Fredric G. Levin College of Law
 Mae C. Quinn, Washington University in St. Louis School of Law
 Jane M. Spinak, Columbia University School of Law

Drug courts, mental health courts, veteran's courts, and other problem-solving courts have grown quickly around the United States since the first drug court began in 1989. These courts are premised on the idea that the criminal justice system should address the problems that cause criminal behavior such as drug addiction and mental illness and that by doing so recidivism will decrease. In an era of mass incarceration, problem-solving courts have been heralded as a way to decrease prison populations by using non-incarceration alternatives. Proponents also point to the lower cost of non-incarceration alternatives. Critics question whether problem-solving courts can have such a far-reaching impact as these types of courts require more resources and regularly suffer from waitlists and the inability to accept all those who might qualify. In addition, many of these courts are structured so that participants must plead guilty to the underlying offense before being accepted. This means they are not saved the serious collateral consequences of a criminal conviction. This panel will discuss the theory behind problem-solving courts, the growth of these courts, the public policy goals served by problem-solving courts, and the concern of critics.

Peer-to-Peer Consumption: Emerging Legal Issues in the New Sharing Economy

Moderator: Diane M. Ring, Boston College Law School

Speakers:

Paul L. Caron, Pepperdine University School of Law
 Stephen R. Miller, University of Idaho College of Law
 Timothy Mulvaney, Texas A&M University School of Law
 Shu-Yi Oei, Tulane University School of Law
 Brishen Rogers, Temple University, James E. Beasley School of Law
 Sarah Schindler, University of Maine School of Law
 David Schleicher, Yale Law School

The past few years have seen the rise of a new model of production and consumption of goods and services grounded in peer-to-peer transactions. In this so-called "sharing economy," startups such as Uber, Airbnb, Lyft, and TaskRabbit enable consumers to summon rides, rent accommodations, or hire help from peers via the internet or a mobile phone application. On the supply side, sharing enables owners of homes and vehicles, or those who possess certain skills to monetize those assets or skills into income streams. The technological platforms employed by these startups enable individual producers and consumers to transact with each other with unprecedented ease. Commentators suggest that the sharing economy is transforming the way people consume and supply goods and services, and that sharing arrangements have the potential to significantly affect traditional industries and models of employment and business. As such, the sharing economy raises important legal and regulatory issues, including questions of whether and how the new startups should be regulated and questions about the appropriate relationship between regulation and innovation. This panel will examine a variety of legal issues raised by the sharing economy, including questions of property, tax, labor, consumer protection, employment discrimination, privacy, and local government law.

Immigration and the 2016 Presidential Election: Campaign Rhetoric, Minority Voting, and Policy Possibilities

Moderator: Kit Johnson, University of Oklahoma College of Law

Speakers:

Gilda Daniels, University of Baltimore School of Law
 Pratheepan Gulasekaram, Santa Clara University School of Law
 Joseph Landau, Fordham University School of Law
 Maria Santana, Anchor and Correspondent, CNN En Español, New York, NY

Presidential hopeful Donald Trump has been making a splash on the topic of immigration since he announced his campaign on June 29, 2015, famously stating: "When Mexico sends its people, they're not sending their best. They're sending people that have lots of problems and they're bringing those problems with us. They're bringing drugs. They're bringing crime. They're rapists."

While quick with incendiary language, Donald Trump took more time to craft his campaign stance on immigration. He released a formal policy paper on August 16, 2015. In the wake of that paper, whether they were prepared to or not, other presidential hopefuls were forced to begin discussing immigration and to put forth their own proposals for change. Indeed, the past two months have witnessed a myriad of proposals from candidates including revoking birthright citizenship, increasing border fencing, legalization, guest worker programs, mass deportations, and even using a "FedEx" style tracking system to monitor non-citizens. These proposals have spurred political and legal discourse about the constitutional parameters within which immigration reform might take place, and the practical effect that executive branch officials can have on the direction of immigration policy.

This early focus on immigration policy suggests that it will remain central throughout the 2016 election cycle both for intraparty contests and the general election. One key question is how immigration talk will affect constituencies necessary for primary and general election victory. This latter question is even more pressing as federal courts, including the Supreme Court, consider several state regulations and constitutional interpretations that could seriously affect the representation and voting opportunities for those key constituencies.

The primary goal of our program is to explore the legal and political ramifications of these various immigration platforms, considering both the way in which electoral politics and voting restrictions will affect the outcome of the election, and the potential for candidates to institute their immigration policy preferences once in office. In addition, we seek to explore what effect election politics are having on the national conversation surrounding immigration.

Moderator: Danielle Bifulci Kocal, Pace University School of Law

Speakers:

Paula Manning, Western State University College of Law
Deborah J. Merritt, The Ohio State University, Michael E. Moritz College of Law
Kerriann Stout, Pace University School of Law

The bar exam has undergone many changes nationwide in recent years, shifting the exam from something that was once perceived to be removed from the law school experience and turning it into something that many students devote time and energy to during their years in law school. Law schools are discovering that they can no longer solely rely on 3L programs and classes to teach law students the necessary skills to pass the bar exam on their first try. The recent downward trend in bar passage proves that overcoming this final hurdle to the practice of law continues to evolve and change and law schools need to be proactive in their response. How can academic support professionals, law school administrators and deans, and law school faculty help to keep up with these changes and provide students with the best possible chance to pass the bar exam on their first attempt? This panel will answer that question by exploring current trends, data and statistics, and institutional responses to this “new normal” in bar exam preparation.

This joint program offers a variety of perspectives on privacy law, and is especially timely in light of developments over the last few years in the United States and in the European Union with regard to surveillance, data privacy, and civil liberties, as well as the worldwide discussions on individual control over personal data and information. This panel will address topics as diverse as the still-developing area of the right to be forgotten in the European Union as it compares with privacy and expressive rights in the United States; the framework of privacy rights in South Africa, Canada, Germany and the United Kingdom; a proposed data privacy structure for the Association of South East Asian Nations (ASEAN); and how the privacy rights framework of the European Union is affected by national security considerations.

SECTION ON EMPLOYMENT DISCRIMINATION LAW, CO-SPONSORED BY ISLAMIC LAW, MINORITY GROUPS, AND WOMEN IN LEGAL EDUCATION*Sutton North, Second Floor, New York Hilton MidtownRegulation of Appearance in the Workplace and the Meaning of Discrimination*Moderator: Angela I. Ann C. McGinley, University of Nevada, Las Vegas, William S. Boyd School of Law

Deborah L. Rhode, Stanford Law School

This program will explore an open question in employment discrimination jurisprudence – What is the scope of an employer’s ability to regulate appearance in the workplace? In partnership with the Sections on Islamic Law, Minority Groups and Women in Legal Education, the program will engage more broadly the concept of diversity and inclusion in modern employment settings and ask – What does leadership look like in the 21st century?

Case law which spans 35 years addressing employer dress and grooming standards, on the one hand, and physical appearance including bodily and facial characteristics of individuals, on the other, reflects the judiciary’s continuous struggle to balance employers’ business judgment and the identity and dignitary interests of workers. Through perspectives on a range of developments including enforcement litigation by the EEOC and notable anniversaries of seminal cases, the panelists will examine the impact of appearance norms on workplace dynamics and notions of belonging, as well as the evolution of interpretive frameworks in anti-discrimination law based on gender, race, color, national origin, religion, as well as the cultural and social contingency of “looks” generally.

This program offers an opportunity to reflect on appearance norms, the substantive contours of the anti-discrimination law, and significantly, the impact of these developments on workplace opportunities for women, people of color, and others whose physical appearance, features or related characteristics raise important questions about employer selection procedures and policies, actual job capacity, and diversity and inclusion in the contemporary workplace. Anti-discrimination scholarship reflects a range of interventions over the years from scholars’ efforts to contextualize the various identity categories and the meaning of employment discrimination. This program includes some of the notable and most impactful voices on the issue.

Program papers will be published in the SMU Law Review.

The rule against admitting hearsay and the hearsay exceptions have been evolving for hundreds of years, but the area is one of continuing controversy. In a 2014 7th Circuit concurring opinion, Judge Richard Posner suggested “the ‘hearsay rule’ is too complex, as well as being archaic.” He proposed expanding the residual exception to have it “swallow much of 801 through 806 [exceptions] . . .” This program will focus on the hearsay rule and its exceptions. Following the showing of Judge Posner’s recorded comments, the other panelists will address whether we still have a rule against admitting hearsay and whether it and the numerous exceptions should be dramatically changed.

How do Indian tribes, First Nations, and other indigenous peoples regulate same-sex marriage, same-sex relationships, and adoption and foster parenting by same-sex couples and LGBT individuals? What role does evidence of tribal culture and tradition, if any, play in these decisions? Additionally, what are the processes by which tribes change their laws with respect to same-sex relationships? An interdisciplinary group of scholars will broadly explore the ways in which tribes, First Nations, and other indigenous peoples regulate sexuality and family structure.

 Sasha Romanosky, Policy Researcher, Rand Corporation, Arlington, VA
 David Thaw, University of Pittsburgh School of Law

Speaker from a Call for Papers: Jill Bronfman, University of California, Hastings College of the Law

Whether they happen when papers or a laptop are left behind in a taxi, when hackers gain access to government or private systems remotely, or when physical access provides thieves with an opportunity to steal data at the point-of-sale, data breaches appear to be occurring with great frequency these days. Recent examples include breaches that occurred at Target, Home Depot, and Michael's stores, Anthem Insurance, the federal Office of Personnel Management, and the Ashley Madison website. The data stolen in each case varies, from employee records, to credit card information, to health records, to sexual fantasies and adulterous desires. The panel members will discuss the effect of these breaches on individuals and data holders; how the law does, can, and should respond to data breaches; and what steps all of us can and should be taking to safeguard our data.

In the past three decades, significant research links implicit assumptions based on race, ethnicity, and gender to assessments, presumptions, and judgments of individuals and their capacities. One example of such research is exemplified in the Implicit Association Test, available at <https://implicit.harvard.edu/implicit/takeatest.html>. Another example is through the use of “blind” and “double-blind” testing. These assumptions influence how individuals are perceived and treated within the various institutional contexts, including the legal system. Often, implicit bias drives the differential treatment of various types of actors as they engage with law and legal processes. The way the implicit bias works is, therefore, important to understand in a system that proclaims itself to be “blind” to race and gender markers.

This panel will bring together scholars of different disciplines to probe questions of bias and metaphors of blindness. Because of new research concerning bias, relationships between perception, sight, knowledge, and judgment have spawned a debate about how to develop wise judgment. Given the complex history of the deployment of “color-blind” in reference to the U.S. Constitution and the variegated history of metaphors of blindness and the imagery of the blindfold, questions abound about the wisdom of relying on such a metaphor for law.

While relatively discrete legacy issues from the U.S. response to the attacks of 9/11 remain, the emergence of new security threats from organizations such as ISIL has brought into sharp relief the broader unresolved questions surrounding the domestic and international legal framework for combating violent non-state and quasi-state actors. A perennial topic in American legal discourse is the degree to which the federal courts have the power to “make law.” This debate often focuses on the courts’ relationship with Congress or their methods of interpretation. Less frequently considered, however, are the federal courts’ “equitable powers”—powers that the courts arguably inherited from English courts of equity at the founding. These powers concerned not just remedies in the formal sense, but also matters closely related to remedies, such as equitable defenses and procedures. This program will consider several different circumstances in which the federal courts have purported to, or declined to, apply the law of equity. Scholars with an interest in equity, judicial power, legal history, remedies or procedure should attend.

Update on the ABA Commission on the Future of Legal Services

Moderator and Speaker: Daniel B. Rodriguez, Northwestern University Pritzker School of Law

Speaker: Andrew M. Perlman, Suffolk University Law School

The ABA Commission on the Future of Legal Services was formed by President William Hubbard in August 2014 in order to thoroughly examine opportunities and initiatives to respond to the dynamic changes in the legal profession and the spaces in which individuals seek legal services. As one commissioner put it early in this process, “this is a process about the well-being of consumers, not of lawyers.” In the succeeding months, the Futures Commission has considered various proposals for reshaping legal services. Some of these proposals have been controversial, in that they challenge the current structure of professional regulation; others have endeavored to synthesize changes already well underway in the legal sector, for example, the advancement and development of technological initiatives in the legal world to deal with the complexity of modern economic and social life. Dean Andy Perlman of Suffolk Law School is the Reporter for the Futures Commission and thus has a central role in, and perspective on, the work of the Commission. Dean Perlman, and Dan Rodriguez, the dean of Northwestern Pritzker School of Law and also a commissioner, will provide an overview of the work of the Commission and will answer questions and invite input.

This is an important project that is unfolding at the crossroads of extraordinary change in our profession. Please join us for an open, candid forum on the work of the Commission.

Incorporating Medical-Legal Partnership Into Your Law School's Triple Aim: Education, Research, and Community Engagement

Moderator: Vicki W. Girard, Georgetown University Law Center

Sylvia Caley, Georgia State University College of Law
Blake D. Morant, The George Washington University Law School

Joel Teitelbaum, Associate Professor and Director of Hirsh Health Law and Policy Program, The George Washington University Department of Health Policy and Management, Washington, D.C.

Medical-Legal Partnership (MLP) is a health care delivery model that recognizes that some barriers to good health have legal solutions. For example, a child suffering from asthma may require legal representation to force a landlord to address the mold or other adverse housing conditions that are exacerbating her condition. Other areas where unmet legal needs create barriers to good health include public benefits, employment, insurance, interpersonal violence, immigration, end-of-life, and education. In an MLP, legal care and health care are integrated, allowing lawyers to engage in preventive legal services that impact the health of especially vulnerable populations. Traditionally, MLPs have been forged between community healthcare providers and lawyers that work for legal aid organizations or law firm pro bono departments. But law schools have much to contribute to and gain from these partnerships. This program will introduce law faculty to MLP and its potential to further the educational, research, and community engagement/social justice missions of their schools. In addition to law school faculty currently engaged in MLP, the panel will also offer perspectives from the National Center for MLP and a law school dean regarding the benefits of MLP to legal education.

This panel will offer both a clear picture of the state of bail and pretrial detention in the United States and an overview of a range of promising bail reform proposals and efforts, many of which have only begun to take shape in recent months. The panel will address a number of important pretrial detention trends: (i) the recent national focus on problems with money bail, due in large part to the publicity surrounding Kalief Browder's death in June 2015 after three years of pretrial detention at Rikers Island; (ii) the accompanying political shift in bail reform, including important legislative developments in New York City, New Jersey, and Los Angeles; (iii) the growth of the number and importance of local community bail funds; (iv) the recent rise in successful litigation against money bail, including settlements in four different jurisdictions in the second half of 2015; and (v) the expanded use of actuarial instruments to reduce unnecessary bail, spurred most recently by the Arnold Foundation's June 2015 release of its Public Safety Assessment.

The program will examine the problem of pretrial detention and the need for bail reform from a diverse set of perspectives. While there is general agreement among panelists that in most states judges set money bail too often and in amounts that are frequently higher than necessary, the panelists have different views of whether judges have too much discretion, whether their decisions can be better guided using actuarial instruments (or whether those tools improperly reduce individualized decision-making), and whether other groups in the community might be better situated to make pretrial detention and bail decisions (e.g., bail juries or community bail funds). Although the panelists all share a common goal—much-needed reform of our broken pretrial system—each has advocated and/or pursued different means of accomplishing that goal.

In 2008, at the first Section on Animal Law panel, panelists debated "Animals as Legal Persons." In 2016, we move beyond that debate to discuss strategies for securing legal rights for animals. As the cases filed on behalf of chimpanzees Tommy, Kiko, Hercules, and Leo demanding the right to bodily integrity via a writ of habeas corpus are appealed to New York's highest court, this round table discussion will focus on a variety of questions designed to illuminate how legal rights for animals might best be achieved. For example, what can the animal rights movement learn from other social movements seeking racial equality, rights for women, LGBT individuals, indigenous peoples, and individuals with disabilities? What legal approaches are available to animal advocates, and how effective are they? Are legal approaches that argue within the property paradigm or that focus on individual animal communities as gateway groups effective in achieving rights for all animals? Given the current state of the law, are non-legal strategies

The overwhelming majority of business cases involve small or medium-sized businesses or individuals operating as sole proprietors. Although these cases do not draw the attention of the mega-cases, they also can involve complex and novel legal issues, challenging operational issues, and needs that are not necessarily addressed by the existing Bankruptcy Code. This program is intended to focus greater attention on these issues and needs. Specifically, the program is designed to facilitate a broad and robust dialogue concerning the effectiveness of the Bankruptcy Code for most business debtors, including those individual debtors who may not be good candidates for chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code but have no other viable reorganization option under existing law.

The session will involve the presentation of papers focused on different aspects of small- and middle-market business chapter 11 cases, with discussants/panelists providing commentary on the papers, as well as a panel discussion of the issues in, and challenges of, individual chapter 11 cases.

Papers will be published in the American Bankruptcy Institute Law Review.

The panel will explore the private/public distinction in family law. While “privacy” in family law typically connotes thoughts of reproductive rights, notions of private decision-making are prominent in other areas as well, including pre- and post-marital agreements. At the dissolution of a relationship, how much freedom should a couple have to construct a child custody plan without state input? Should a court always be permitted to second-guess parents’ decisions based on a “best-interests” standard or should parents’ mutual decision control? Should parties be permitted to determine the financial terms of any separation agreement, perhaps even avoiding having a court review the agreement at all? Or is there a continuing mandatory role for judicial review and oversight, at least for the purpose of protecting weaker parties from abuse—but perhaps also to prevent parties from overreaching, or to promote a certain set of “goods” that the state favors at dissolution of a relationship? The panel will discuss how “contracting” may further or hinder certain goals of individuals, the state, and perhaps sub-state religious or cultural communities, and may also discuss private/public in other areas such as assisted reproductive technology (ART), cohabitation agreements, and the roles within education and child-rearing.

A recurring question in intellectual property law concerns the delineation of the scope of the protection it confers. Enforcing rights in intangible things often requires some form of interpretation (linguistic or otherwise) to determine the very boundaries of the thing protected. In order to understand what a copyright's protection includes, for instance, it is necessary to engage in idea/expression analysis, or otherwise separate the utilitarian (non-protectable) aspects from the expressive (protectable) ones. A patent's enforcement typically hinges on claim construction (or interpretation), and a trademark's enforceability similarly depends on interpretive issues regarding the trademark's meaning to consumers and its functionality. All three areas thus embed epistemological and evidentiary questions in their assessment of scope yet they are not always recognized as questions concerning interpretive choices and methods. Recent case law has seen renewed attention to interpretive questions, including how patents should be construed (and whether these issues are questions of fact or law); by whom; and at what point in litigation. Recent scholarly debates concern whether IP statutes should be interpreted like other subject matter statutes. This panel will examine the question of scope in intellectual property law as a function of interpretive questions that require greater theorization as such.

During the past few decades there has been a decrease in the number of jury trials. As a result, many litigators have little to no trial experience and many law students will likely not represent clients at a jury trial any time soon upon graduating. Moreover, during that same period there has been an increase in the number of arbitrations where the rules of evidence often do not apply. Nevertheless, evidence is taught at every law school and many schools require it. This program will explore whether it remains important to teach evidence to students interested in litigating and whether, given recent trends in the law, we should explore teaching it in different ways and/or emphasizing different topics. The panelists will also discuss innovative ways they have approached teaching evidence. The program will include a speaker selected from a Call for Papers.

In Federalist No. 78, Alexander Hamilton famously declared the judiciary to be the “least dangerous” branch of government, because (as later paraphrased by Justice Frankfurter) it possesses “neither the purse nor the sword” to enforce its decisions. The courts’ authority, therefore, rests on the public’s understanding of—and ultimate confidence in—their opinions. And because the primary link between the courts and the public is the written word, the need for effective legal writing becomes all the more important. This panel will explore the job of communicating the work of the courts to the public and consider the various roles of judges, the media, practitioners, and legal scholars.

Writing and placing law review articles is endlessly fascinating to legal academics. Long a competitive but mysterious enterprise, legal scholarship has seen important recent developments. An increasing number of new professors come from fellowships at elite law schools, where they receive shared advice on writing and placement. Moreover, legal blogs now provide a public forum to compare notes about what it takes for scholarship to draw attention and place well, from title length to crafting abstracts. This program assesses the state of the art of legal scholarship from both a strategic and a critical perspective. It considers two principal questions. First, what are the best, or at least trendiest, approaches to framing, writing, and placing scholarship—whether at the substantive level of subject matter or method, or at the technical level of titles, abstracts, novelty claims, cover letters, etc.? Second, as these practices are routinized and shared, should we be concerned about them? Are the techniques that encourage elite journal editors to publish an article consistent with the norms of serious academic work? Or are there worrisome tensions between what it takes for an article to “succeed,” and the values and integrity of serious legal scholarship?

In a world of dramatic economic, technological, and legal change, there is a need for contractual innovation which has traditionally been challenging for transactional lawyers due to a number of factors, including stickiness in contract terms, locked-in practices, and structural impediments to better contract design. Transformative technology and stresses on the legal profession, with a focus on reducing costs, may further affect contractual innovation. Panel members for this program will address a number of important questions as to how to encourage innovation by transactional lawyers in the face of these challenges: What role can and should transactional lawyers play in driving contractual innovation? To what extent can innovation in designing contracts provide transactional lawyers with new opportunities for premium work? What impact does the structure of law firms play in shaping the process of contract design and production? What roles do norms and standard practices in deal-making play in shaping innovation in contract design? Does the process of innovation differ in one area of transactional practice from another; for example, mergers and acquisitions versus venture capital financing versus establishing unincorporated entities?

A number of studies concerning author diversity in legal scholarship provide the background for our discussion. This Discussion Group will explore some of the scholarship on diversity in legal scholarship, including an exploration of various aspects of what diversity means in that process. The Group will consider: 1) how faculty members and law journal boards can help increase the chance that an article written by women or people of color will be accepted; and 2) how journal leadership can adopt an agenda that results in a more diverse set of authors in its publication. The Discussion Group hopes to engage faculty to think about our many different roles: as scholars who submit articles for law review publication, as law review advisors, and as mentors to students and other faculty.

More specifically, participants will focus on a series of questions related to author diversity in legal scholarship, including: 1) Why is this discussion needed, and what prompted each person to want to participate on this panel?; 2) Why is author diversity important to the participants as well as more generally to the legal community and beyond?; 3) What do we mean by author diversity?; and 4) What changes are desirable, and what changes are feasible, at the personal, institutional, and law school levels?

In discussing what changes might be appropriate, participants will be encouraged to offer concrete suggestions for both faculty and students. For example, what are the benefits and drawbacks of the author-blind review process, and what changes can be implemented that both correct for the drawbacks while maintaining the benefits? What other strategies might be more appropriate? How can law schools support diversity in faculty scholarship? What conversations might faculty have with law review editors about the importance of author diversity? How should the law review publishing process affect our careers, and in what ways should it not affect them?

The participants for this Discussion Group consist of a mix of individuals identified in the original proposal and individuals selected from a call for participation. Attendees who are not formal participants, are welcome to attend the Discussion Group, space is limited. The moderator may open the discussion to include attendees at some point during the session.

Discussion Group Moderator: Meredith R. Miller, Touro College, Jacob D. Fuchsberg Law Center

There is a reality commonly ignored by the curriculum in most law schools: the largest segment of law graduates will eventually be solo or small firm practitioners. Even before the Great Recession, nearly two thirds of lawyers in the United States practiced solo or in small firms. Since 2008, trends show an increase in the number of recent law graduates that “hang a shingle.” According to a 2012 report of the American Bar Association, about three-quarters of lawyers in the United States work in private practice. Of those attorneys, about seventy percent practice solo or in small firms. Many find themselves in this practice setting soon after graduation. The National Association for Law Placement (“NALP”) statistics for the class of 2013 show that 42% of graduates in private practice are working in firms with 2-10 lawyers; about 5% are already operating solo practices.

In short, more than half of the attorneys in the United States are small business owners – they are operating, managing and growing a law practice. As framed by Professor Luz Herrera, they must be “lawyer-entrepreneurs.” The law curriculum rarely presents students with opportunities to build the competencies necessary to operate a practice. As William Hornsby, staff counsel at the American Bar Association (“ABA”), has written: “Simply put, law school graduates are ill-prepared for the future they are most likely to pursue.”

There is a small but growing chorus urging law schools to do more to prepare graduates who will operate their own practices. There have not yet been comprehensive or concrete proposals for the law school curriculum, however, this discussion will, therefore, have two goals: (1) to address whether law schools should design a developed suite of curricular offerings for students who intend to operate their own practices at some point after graduation and, (2) if yes, what should those course offerings entail?

The participants in the Discussion Group consist of a mix of individuals identified in the original proposal and individuals selected from a call for participation. Attendees who are not formal participants, are welcome to attend the Discussion Group, space is limited. The moderator may open the discussion to include attendees at some point during the session.

This panel will address particular questions and challenges that arise for IP teachers whose audience includes or is focused on students other than law students. Panelists have taught undergraduate students in various majors, as well as graduate students and professional school students. As legal education continues to evolve, it may become increasingly common for law professors to teach to non-law students. It is thus helpful to develop a toolbox for teaching to students with diverse disciplinary backgrounds and potentially quite different needs with respect to an IP course.

AALS RECEPTION FOR LEGAL EDUCATORS FROM LAW SCHOOLS OUTSIDE THE U.S.Beekman Parlor, Second Floor, New York Hilton Midtown

Law increasingly exists in a global context, both in the delivery of legal services and legal education itself. As educators, we aspire to help students develop the global competencies and connections needed for them to take part fully in the future of the legal profession. A more international perspective can also enrich our own scholarship and teaching. AALS invites legal educators from outside the United States to attend this reception held in their honor. The reception will provide an opportunity to mingle with colleagues from law schools all around the globe and forge important potential partnerships and connections.

Joining the Administration: Law School and University Leadership for Law School Professors

Moderator: Susan Hanley Duncan, University of Louisville, Louis D. Brandeis School of Law

Speakers:

Melissa Greipp, Marquette University Law School
Rebekah N. Hanley, University of Oregon School of Law
Carol M. Parker, University of Tennessee College of Law
Clifford Zimmerman, Northwestern University Pritzker School of Law

Law school professors across the country have expanded the scope of their institutional contributions by assuming a variety of complementary administrative or programmatic assignments. Many opportunities have introduced challenges that have facilitated professional growth and have re-energized professors while allowing them also to enhance students' educational experiences and career prospects. The opportunities often have included fruitful collaborations with partners in the legal academy and beyond. This panel will highlight opportunities for mid-career law school professors to supplement their teaching with other duties that draw on their expertise, improve their institutions, and introduce welcomed variety into their work portfolios. It will also explore the considerations that university and law school leaders focus on when choosing faculty members for administrative positions and projects. The career paths and projects of several panelists will demonstrate the benefits of lateral moves from faculty to administration and the advantages of an alternative: supplementing academic work with other kinds of responsibilities. Panelists include individuals on well-established paths as well as paths less frequently followed. They will not only discuss their own experiences but will also draw on the inspiring stories of others to emphasize the range of leadership opportunities available to law school professors within the academy.

SECTION ON CRIMINAL JUSTICE*Sutton South, Second Floor, New York Hilton MidtownThe Supreme Court and the Future of Lethal Injection

Moderator and Speaker: Corinna Barrett Lain, The University of Richmond School of Law

Speakers:

Ty Alper, University of California, Berkeley School of Law
Eric Berger, University of Nebraska College of Law
Deborah W. Denno, Fordham University School of Law
Adam Liptak, Supreme Court Correspondent and Sidebar Columnist, New York Times, Washington, D.C.

A series of botched executions in 2014 have once again thrown the death penalty into the spotlight—and with it, lethal injection as a method of execution. States are trying new, untested protocols and procuring drugs from largely unregulated compounding pharmacies. They are passing secrecy statutes to shield their execution procedures and drugs from public scrutiny. And they are reconsidering other, more gruesome methods of execution. Each of these developments raises serious constitutional concerns, and the Supreme Court's recent grant of certiorari in a lethal injection case out of Oklahoma, Glossip v. Gross, raises many more questions.

SECTION ON LAW LIBRARIES AND LEGAL INFORMATION*Beekman Parlor, Second Floor, New York Hilton MidtownLaw Libraries and Data Assessment: Using Analytics to Promote Change That Matters to Our Law Schools

Moderator: Steven D. Hinckley, The Pennsylvania State University – Penn State Law

Speakers:

Teresa Miguel-Stearns, Yale Law School
Michael Robak, University of Missouri-Kansas City School of Law
Todd M. Venie, University of Florida Fredric G. Levin College of Law

Libraries are awash in data and, in recent years, much has been written in professional journals and discussed at educational programs about libraries' use of metrics and data analytics to help them make wide-ranging qualitative and quantitative assessments about their performance, staffing, overall effectiveness, and economic value. Certainly, libraries in the private sector, public libraries, and non-law academic libraries have been doing this kind of analysis for some time and, recently, some law firm and other private sector law libraries have developed similar programs. Despite these clear trends, academic law libraries have hardly been in the game in their use of data analytics and metrics to help assess aspects of their own operations, but it appears that this is changing. This program will feature presentations by librarians engaged in various metrics and analytics programs and studies in three academic law library settings. Through their examples, academic law librarians will gain a better appreciation for how academic law libraries can mine various data sources and use the results to improve their operations, budgets, staffing, and services.

Session V: Follow-up and Small-Group Feedback

This workshop will be held on Saturday, January 9, from 9:00 am - 5:00 pm and on Sunday, January 10, from 9:00 am - 12:00 pm.

For a law professor conducting on-going empirical research, you can register for the Sunday morning session only. This new feature is designed to allow researchers opportunities for targeted feedback on their projects. Priority is given to participants who attend the entire workshop. “Alums” of previous AALS empirical workshops are welcome.

This session follows up on any final questions from the previous day’s proceedings. We will then break into small groups focusing on specific areas and topics, based on information from participants’ comments the previous day and their areas of interest as submitted prior to the workshop.

Plenary Session: A Conversation - Reframing the Narrative on Legal Education

Moderator: Gregory H. Williams, Former President, The City College of New York, and University of Cincinnati, Former Dean, Ohio State University, Michael E. Moritz College of Law, Hastings on Hudson, NY

Speakers:

Paulette Brown, President, American Bar Association, Locke Lord LLP, Morristown, NJ
Richard A. Matasar, Senior Vice President for Strategic Initiatives and Institutional Effectiveness, Tulane University, New Orleans, LA
Blake D. Morant, The George Washington University Law School

Join Dean Blake D. Morant, AALS President, ABA President Paulette Brown and former law school dean Richard Matasar (Chicago-Kent, University of Florida and New York Law School) in a conversation moderated by former AALS President Gregory Williams, about reframing the narrative on legal education and the legal profession. These distinguished leaders will share their perspectives on the positive attributes of legal education and the profession in counterpoint to the negative light in which law schools and the legal profession are so often portrayed today by the media and others. A brief Q&A with audience participation will follow.

Creating & Publishing Teaching Materials - Navigating the IP Questions

Speakers:

Barton Beebe, New York University School of Law
Joe Miller, University of Georgia School of Law
Pamela Samuelson, University of California, Berkeley School of Law
Rebecca L. Tushnet, Georgetown University Law Center

Many law professors create edited case collections and other teaching materials, but may hesitate to make them more widely available out of concern for questions related to intellectual property law. Others may consider creating them, but may opt against it out of concern for those same IP questions. This program, designed for professors across the law school curriculum, aims to dispel IP myths, answer IP questions, and help equip those interested in publishing casebooks and other teaching materials to do so outside the traditional hardcopy publishing channel. Presentations will be practical, take-aways will include written “best practices” guides, and there will be ample time for a question and answer session. All four presenters are experienced IP professors, and three have recent experience both creating and publishing casebook-style materials independent of the traditional publishers.

This panel will cover topics stemming from changes in teaching loads and law-practice demands. Requiring the appellate brief in the first year of law school has been a practice for decades. Challenging this requirement, panelists will explore whether (1) shorter motion briefs would better prepare students for litigation practice; (2) requiring transactional skills is appropriate when many graduates land in corporate practice; and (3) changes in traditional assignments comport with evolving ABA standards. Specifically, panelists will propose the following: Authors of the book “The New 1L” will reimagine how law schools teach lawyering skills in the 1L curriculum. Can we teach 1Ls to act and think like lawyers using real clients and current issues? How should the curriculum cover critical lawyering skills beyond memos and briefs? A panelist suggests that LRW professors design frequent, shorter assignments, drawing support from cognitive science and changes in law practice. “Let’s Not Reimagine Too Much!” Another panelist advocates that the appellate-brief assignment is valuable if presented with substantive learning experiences. A panelist will discuss how writing and other professional skills can be integrated into what are traditionally regards as ‘doctrinal’ courses. No law firm has separate doctrinal and skills departments. He will address “Bridging the Divide” with problem-solving and client-centered exercises, and will draw upon examples from First Amendment, criminal law, and civil rights classes.

Over the last several years, fatal shootings and extreme bodily force exacted on both men and women of color at the hands of police have captured international attention and have raised serious questions about the fractured relationship between the police and the communities that they serve. Indeed, in one of his last acts as The United States Attorney General, Eric Holder, in March 2015, selected six American cities to serve as pilot sites for a national initiative on restoring relationships between law enforcement and citizens. Recent events around the nation have crystallized the need for governmental intervention as it pertains to policing practices within communities of color. This panel will offer a round table exploring these issues as well as related civil and human rights concerns that have (re)surfaced from both historic and contemporary perspectives.

Papers from the program will be published in Yale Law Forum.

Results of the 2014 National Survey of Law Student Well Being: Correlations Between Alcohol Use, Drug Use and Mental Health Issues and Attitudes Toward Seeking Help

Moderator: Johnny D. Pryor, Indiana University Robert H. McKinney School of Law

Speakers:

Katherine Bender, Programming Director, Dave Nee Foundation, New York, NY

David B. Jaffe, American University, Washington College of Law

Jerome M. Organ, University of St. Thomas School of Law

The presentation will describe the extent to which mental health issues among law students correlate with alcohol use and/or drug use and will also describe survey results that identify reasons why respondents with alcohol, drug, and/or mental health problems are reluctant to seek professional help, such as how such problems relate to the bar admission process. The panel will also discuss questions of culture and messaging in law school and in the legal profession that may discourage students and attorneys dealing with issues from seeking the help they need to remain productive, and re-examining the best practices therein.

Speakers:

Skip Horne, Santa Clara University School of Law

Darren L. Nealy, The University of Michigan Law School

Anthony Tolbert, University of California, Los Angeles School of Law

Catharine Wells, Boston College Law School

Words and actions can often have unintended harmful consequences. In some rare and unfortunate occasions, harmful comments are intentional. When these events occur in our law schools, how do we respond to them? This panel will explore the ways that law schools can address issues of identity-based intentional affronts and unintentional slights through: (i) preventative and educational programming; (ii) bystander intervention techniques and coping skills; (iii) best practices for student interactions with alumni and employers; and (iv) the role of professors in addressing microaggressions.

AALS Workshop for Pretenured Law School Teachers of Color

AALS would like to thank the Law School Admission Council for their generous grant in support of this Workshop.

Minority law teachers face special challenges in the legal academy, starting from their first day of teaching. At this workshop, diverse panels of experienced and successful law professors will offer ways to successfully meet these challenges as they arise in the context of scholarship, teaching, service, and the tenure process. By bringing together faculty who are navigating similar career paths, the workshop will facilitate development of relationships that can provide long-term sources of support.

The workshop will be of interest to all law school faculty of color who are navigating the tenure process and looking for guidance and encouragement.

PLENARY SESSION

Gramercy, Lower Level, Sheraton New York Times Square Hotel

Part I - Service: Challenge, Opportunity and Passion

Part II - Teaching and Outsider Status

Speakers:

Phoebe A. Haddon, Chancellor and Professor, Rutgers School of Law - Camden
 Kevin R. Johnson, University of California, Davis, School of Law

This final session will challenge participants to develop service to their school, university, profession, and community as outlets for their academic and non-academic passions and interests.

How do you approach the third prong of the tripartite journey toward tenure? There is service and service. Your service obligations may appear to be a chore, a burden (and, sometimes, they really are!). But you have the power to transform that perception and reality. Service is a gateway to learning about, and being active and influential in, the operation of your school.

Your service provides an opportunity to interact with your colleagues—and for them to interact with you—to build strong personal and professional relationships. (On both sides, there is ongoing interactive assessment of participants' character, capability, and potential.) This session will illustrate the ways in which the power resides with you to transform your service obligations, create your own service opportunities, and follow your passion in order to develop and extend your areas of expertise and your networks at the same time.

Law professors of color often report special challenges in the classroom stemming from dynamics that are hard to spot and to know how to address. This session will identify specific issues that may be of concern. How do I deal with difficult students? How do I ensure diverse participation in the classroom? How should I address the various differences among students—particularly racial or gender differences—and differences between students and myself? Dean Johnson will offer some advice on how to plan and to facilitate classroom teaching in both large and small courses, and to be a more effective teacher. His remarks will be followed by a lengthy period for questions and interactive discussion.

Engaging Students in Real-World Problem Solving: An Interactive Workshop

Moderator: Kalyani Robbins, Florida International University College of Law

Speakers:

H. Jordan Diamond, University of California, Berkeley School of Law

Michael B. Gerrard, Columbia University School of Law

Tracy Hester, University of Houston Law Center

Becky L. Jacobs, University of Tennessee College of Law

Sarah A. Krakoff, University of Colorado School of Law

Laurie Ristino, Vermont Law School

Law Schools are increasingly looking for ways to engage students in real-world problem solving beyond traditional clinical education and externship programs. This effort is driven by the 2007 Carnegie Foundation report, societal criticism of the value and cost of legal education, and by creative pedagogy that is being increasingly applied in the environment, resources, energy, and the emerging food and agriculture arenas because of the need to address systems-scale problems. Here, students benefit from student and faculty engagement in real-world problem solving. For example, law programs around the country are involving students in examining and creating legal structures that can accommodate renewable energy, facilitate the growth of sustainable food systems, address ecosystem management challenges, and deal with complex climate challenges. The format for this program will be interactive. The representatives of the six selected programs will provide short presentations on their programs. The moderator will then open the discussion to the audience so that attendees have the opportunity to engage in a robust, generative dialogue with the panelists and with each other. The result, we hope, is a better understanding of how to build and manage these programs, more opportunities for students, and new capacity to solve important problems.

Section on Agricultural and Food Law held a virtual business meeting in advance of the Annual Meeting.

SESSION I*Gramercy, Lower Level, Sheraton New York Times Square HotelFormulating Research Questions and Selecting Methods that Fit

How do researchers formulate a specific question that is answerable empirically? How does one identify an appropriate method for answering any given particular research question? And how can we combine different kinds of methods for studying the law as it works in action? This session introduces a variety of research methods and evaluates their strengths and weaknesses for answering different kinds of research questions. The session will also compare approaches in terms of their assumptions, objectives, types of data collected, and use of theory. We will consider a wide range of empirical methods and issues including interviewing, survey design, focus groups, participant observation, language/text analysis, historical analysis, and when/how to combine methods - including quantitative and experimental approaches. We will also focus on the crucial role played by social science literature reviews in empirical project design.

Session V: Follow-up and Small-Group Feedback

This workshop will be held on Saturday, January 9, from 9 a.m. – 5 p.m. and on Sunday, January 10, from 9 a.m. – 12 p.m.

For a law professor conducting on-going empirical research, you can register for the Sunday morning session only. This new feature is designed to allow researchers opportunities for targeted feedback on their projects. Priority is given to participants who attend the entire workshop. “Alums” of previous AALS empirical workshops are welcome.

This session follows up on any final questions from the previous day’s proceedings. We will then break into small groups focusing on specific areas and topics, based on information from participants’ comments the previous day and their areas of interest as submitted prior to the workshop.

When Chevron was first decided it was generally welcomed on the right side of the political spectrum as a principled method constraining judicial discretion and permitting the executive to exert policy control over the administrative state. But as the administrative state continues to grow, some now see Chevron as removing an important check on government power and an abdication of the judiciary's authority to say what the law is. Some members of the Supreme Court are now open to reconsidering judicial deference to agency action, at least in certain areas, such as determining their own jurisdictions and interpreting their own regulations. The panel will consider the extent to which the new skepticism toward Chevron in particular and judicial deference to agencies in general is justified.

LUNCHEON DEBATE: RESOLVED: THE FCC DOES NOT HAVE THE LEGAL AUTHORITY TO IMPLEMENT NET NEUTRALITY*Riverside Ballroom, Third Floor, Sheraton New York Times SquareModerator: M. Todd Henderson, The University of Chicago, The Law SchoolDebaters:

- D. Adam Candeub, Michigan State University College of Law
- Justin “Gus” Hurwitz, University of Nebraska College of Law
- Geoffrey A. Manne, International Center for Law and Economics
- James B. Speta, Northwestern University School of Law

The FCC derives its legal authority almost entirely from statutes that predate the Internet--primarily from the 1934 Communications Act, which was designed for the regulation of a national telephone monopolist, and the 1996 Telecommunications Act, which was designed to incrementally deregulate the communications industry as the vestiges of that national monopoly gave way to competition. Over the past 20 years, the Internet has become the foundation of the communications industry, playing a role similar to that of the monopoly-provided telecommunications services that the FCC has traditionally regulated. There is unquestionably more competition today than there was in 1934, but perhaps not as much as was hoped in 1996. The FCC’s Open Internet Order, in which the FCC brought Internet Service Providers within the regulatory framework initially created in 1934, presents a compelling example of an agency struggling to find a new role in a changed industry – struggling to imbue old statutes with broad grants of power to govern what the FCC, but perhaps not Congress, believes are issues properly within its ambit. In doing so, the Order thrusts the FCC into current debates about the scope of the administrative state, the potential revival of the major questions doctrine, and the potential demise of Chevron. Framed by these issues, this debate will consider whether the FCC’s Open Internet Order fits within the agency’s statutory authority.

Since before the Revolution, American legal and political traditions have supported many forms of multiculturalism, through institutions such as freedom of association, religious liberty, parental rights, freedom of speech, private property, federalism, often open immigration policy, and the like. And those traditions have likewise imposed constraints on such multiculturalism. What can those traditions tell us about today's multiculturalism debates?

Special Events in the Exhibit Hall

Environmental Law Institute

Stop by the Environmental Law Institute's booth (#204) to learn about our Just for Professors website, and be sure to enter the drawing for this year's giveaway!!

Ravel

Visit Ravel's booth (#211) on Friday, January 8, 3:30 p.m. to learn how Harvard Law and Ravel are making comprehensive case law available for free to the world. HLS Special Projects Manager Adam Ziegler will be joining us to answer questions about the collaboration.

Themis Bar Exam

Bar exam pass rates have fallen dramatically the last few years. The more information you have about your past graduates' performances, the better your future graduates will do on their bar exams. Join Themis Bar Review's Director of Online Learning in Booth #203 as he discusses some of the information we rely on as we design our bar review and early bar prep programs, the data points we use to determine "at-risk" students, and how we use both to counsel students throughout their bar students. In addition, he'll highlight the advantages of a fully online course while also covering ways we continue to improve our course based on the data we collect.

West Academic

Join us on Friday, January 8, 3 p.m. – 5 p.m. in booth #501 for specialty coffee drinks and desserts as we showcase CaseBookPlus™!

Wolters Kluwer

Please join the Wolters Kluwer Legal Education team in booth #500 on Friday, January 8 at 3:30 p.m. for a Wine and Cheese Reception to meet Professor Jens David Ohlin, and help us celebrate the launch of his new Criminal Law casebook; Criminal Law: Doctrine, Application, and Practice!

Complete Equity Markets, Inc. was founded in 1967. For over 40 years, Complete Equity Markets has continually expanded to meet the growing needs of our clients and identify new areas of opportunity resulting from changing market conditions. By working with many of the strongest U.S. and international companies, we serve professionals in specific fields, rather than addressing the entire insurance industry. We design, develop and administer insurance programs for professionals, associations, businesses and individuals. Talented people, creative solutions and quick responsiveness to client needs continue Complete Equity Markets' tradition of growth.

The Environmental Law Institute (ELI) makes law work for people, places, and the planet. For over four decades, ELI has been fostering innovative, just, and practical law and policy solutions to enable leaders across borders and sectors to make environmental, economic, and social progress. Through ELI's research, education, and publication programs, we provide objective data and analysis, convene diverse groups working toward environmental solutions, educate and train legal professionals and the public, and help develop law and policy. Together, we work toward ELI's vision: a healthy environment, prosperous economies, and vibrant communities founded on the rule of law.

U.S. News Academic Insights, built specifically for institutions, provides schools the ability to analyze their relative position to other institutions based on single data points or ranking criteria for over 25 years. In addition to more than 5 million data points, its tools allow users to view and manipulate the metrics beneath two decades of the Best Colleges and Best Graduate rankings. Over the last few months, we have added 3 new enhancements to the platform: a histogram data visualization, intelligent sorting, and 2 million additional data points.

RELIGION AND THE STATE IN AMERICAN LAW

Boris I. Bittker, Scott C. Idleman, and
Frank S. Ravitch

Religion and the State in American Law provides a comprehensive and up-to-date overview of religion and government in the United States, from historical origins to modern laws and rulings. Topics include the history of church-state relations and religious liberty, religion in the classroom, and expressions of religion in government. This book also covers the role of religion in specific areas of law such as contracts, taxation, employment, land use regulation, torts, criminal law, and domestic relations as well as in specialized contexts such as prisons and the military. Accessible to the general as well as the professional reader, this book will be of use to scholars, judges, practicing lawyers, and the media.

YOU'RE INVITED!

Join us for specialty coffee drinks and desserts in Booth 600 on Friday from 3pm-5pm to learn more about CasebookPlus and the new features available for Fall 2016 courses.

Introducing CasebookPlus™!

LEARN. ASSESS. IMPRESS.

CasebookPlus provides support beyond your classroom lectures and materials by offering additional digital resources to you and your students. With CasebookPlus your students will receive a print copy of the casebook along with lifetime digital access, self-assessments tied to the text, and additional digital study resources.

Students can still utilize all of the CasebookPlus digital resources if they've purchased a used book by buying the digital-only option. And, of course, the traditional print casebook is still available on its own for all titles in our CasebookPlus program.

Now available in these subjects:
Business Organizations, Civil Procedure, Constitutional Law, Criminal Law, Criminal Procedure, Evidence, Property, and Federal Income Taxation. Coming soon in Contracts, Professional Responsibility, and Torts!

Stop by Booth 600 to find out what's new for your Fall 2016 courses, including a new feature giving you the option to view your students' self-assessment progress and results.

THREE SERIES TO HELP YOU TEACH PRACTICE SKILLS

The inexpensive casefile-based supplemental texts found in the Bridge to Practice Series™ contain sets of simulations, covering a wide array of issues, that gives students the opportunity to learn essential lawyering skills.

Available for Fall 2016 courses in the following subjects: Antitrust, Civil Procedure, Contracts, Criminal Law, Criminal Procedure, Evidence, Professional Responsibility, Property, and Trusts and Estates. Learn more at bridgetopractice.com.

Books in the Developing Professional Skills Series can be used to incorporate skills training into traditional doctrinal courses. These low-cost supplemental texts help you teach skills including legal drafting, client interviewing and counseling, negotiation, advocacy, and policy making.

Available for Fall 2016 courses in the following subjects: Business Associations, Civil Procedure, Constitutional Law, Contracts, Criminal Procedure, Environmental Law, Property, and Workplace Law. Learn more at developingprofessionalskills.com.

The primary coursebooks in the Experiencing Law Series cover the doctrine traditionally covered in the classroom while simultaneously offering experiential exercises that will illustrate the concepts of the subject being taught—learning by doing in the presence of an expert teacher.

Available for Fall 2016 courses in these subjects: Business Organizations, Civil Procedure, Family Law, Housing Law, Remedies, and Wills and Trusts. Learn more at experiencingseries.com.
